The Golden Hoof

Sheep were the first animals domesticated by man. They were pre-eminently adapted to grazing purposes. This has led to the belief that sheep belong only to rough frontier country. English farmers have demonstrated the fallacy of this belief by making sheep the most profitable farm animals under intensive farming conditions. The sheep like the dairy cow gives two returns annually. The fleece easily pays for the cost of feed and care for a whole year. The product in lambs becomes clear gain. The increase becomes as high as 150 per cent and no meat can be placed on the market with so little grain as mutton. In figuring the returns from sheep, the lambs and wool are only legitimate sources of profit. Sheep are continuously at war with weeds of all kinds. Only when they lie down together—with weeds inside—is there peace. It is impossible to place a money value on this service which they render. Cattle pastures are becoming more weedy each year. Such pastures judiciously grazed by sheep would soon not only support the sheep, but would support additional cattle as well. Wherever the sheep graze, the land becomes more fertile and productive. Truly, "the sheep has a golden hoof." Starting with one ewe lamb, figuring she has an ewe lamb each year and every ewe lamb born has an ewe lamb each year for twenty years: First year one lamb, twentieth year 524,288 lambs; 524,288 lambs at $5.00 each, $2,621,400. Of course deduct expense you would have to pay for pasture during the summer and care during the winter. Sale of wool would be considerable of a credit. E. W. RUMBLE.

The primary election system is having fewer friends every year and it will not be long until it is thrown into the discard and both parties go back to the old convention style of nominating their tickets. At the time the primary law was enacted it was thought to be a cure-all for many faults but has since been found fully as weak as the system it sought to improve, and in some respects much worse. Hail the day when the political convention returns to its own.

Stock Market Report.

Following is a report of the Portland stock market for the week of Sept. 18.

More cattle came to hand than were looked for today. While the run was small indications were that it would not be over last Monday's run. Total receipts for the day were 976. Steers sold at $7.00 for the best, with the bulk better than $6.50. Cows were sold as high as $6.00 and bulk brought $5.50 up to the high spot. Bull $3 to $4.25.

Receipts of but 1400 hogs made a short market that went to $9.85 on prime lights. Quality as a rule was nothing out of the ordinary. Bulk of light hogs went over $9.60.

Sheep receipts were 1400. Lambs sold at $8.50 for the best. Wethers sold at $6.75 and ewes at $5.50. Demand was good.
