Are the People of Guthrie on a Would-be Rapist.

A Negro Strung to a Limb Without Much Delay.

He Was Charged and Convicted of a Heinous Crime.

Mrs. Covington's Assailant Caught and Promptly Executed.

A Ghastly Spectacle to Passengers and Citizens.

Once More An Enraged populace Say Our Wives, Daughters and Mothers Must Be Protected.

THE CRIME AND CONSEQUENCE

Jas. Barnes, a burly negro, was hanged at Guthrie at 5:20 o'clock yesterday evening for attempting a rape on Mrs. Clarence Covington.

His snow covered body was still hanging in full view of the passers-by this morning, a solemn warning to those who have an inclination to gratify hellish lusts on defenseless women.

A band of citizens took the law into their hands and meted out justice to a brute who came under the protection of the unwritten law, which says: "The honor of women must be preserved, and the man who commits an outrage, or attempts one, on a defenseless woman must die."

The readers of the LEAF CHRONICLE will remember an account of an attempted rape on Mrs. Clarence Covington, which appeared in these columns on Saturday. This account went on to say that Mrs. Covington was at her home, near Guthrie, when the negro assaulted her. A later account of the trouble with the brute was obtained this morning from an entirely reliable source.

Last Thursday evening Jas. Barnes who was employed by Mr. Covington, came home from Guthrie and went straight to Mrs. Covington's room, Mr. Covington being absent at his mill, a half mile or more distant. Barnes told Mrs. Covington that he had purchased her a pair of gloves and insisted on her taking them as a present from a servant. Mrs. Covington told him that she did not want his gloves, but the negro insisted on her taking them. To get rid of him Mrs. Covington told him to put the gloves on the table and go to the cabin with his wife, where he belonged. He laid the gloves down, but instead of going to his cabin he made a rush for Mrs. Covington. He caught her by the arm and started to put his arm around her waist. She pulled loose from him, but he became desperate and made a rush at her catching her firmly about the waist. She screamed and fought or her honor. Her cries attracted Barnes' wife and another negro woman, who were in the cabin a short distance from the house. They ran to the house, and caught the negro with his arms about Mrs. Covington. Confronted by the women, the brute turned Mrs. Covington loose. The lady ran to a room and locked herself up. This seemed to enrage the negro and he began trying to batter down the door. Mrs. Covington in the meantime, however, had sent one of her little boys off to notify the neighbors. While the negro was trying to batter down the door, Mr. Dillard, a neighbor, arrived on the scene. He grabbed a chair and attempted to knock the negro down. The negro evaded the blow, however, and ran from the house, making his escape.

The news was soon all over the country, and the citizens began quietly to investigate the matter. They were soon convinced that Barnes was a guilty negro and a search began for him. He was finally captured by Marshal Rickman, of Guthrie, on the farm of Lawson Poindexter. He was taken to Guthrie and locked up. This was Friday night, and the citizens were much in favor of stringing him up them, but they decided to await more evidence against the accused, having no desire to hang an innocent man.

The evidence accumulated, however, until Monday evening, when the people decided they had enough. About 5 o'clock a band of about twenty men approached Mr. Rickman and demanded of him the jail keys. He refused to give them up. He was seized by the crowd and the keys were taken from him.

A rush was then made for the jail. Arriving there the mob had trouble in finding the key to the outer lock. Growing impatient, some of them procured a hammer and broke the lock. The wretch was soon in the hands of the mob, crying for his life.

They dragged the negro from the jail out to the front, where a small rope was put around his neck. The other end of the rope was thrown over a limb of a small tree which stands in front of the jail. Strong arms pulled away at the rope and the negro was hoisted from the ground. He struggled and the rope broke. He was again caught and a second attempt was made to hang him. This time, just as he left the ground, several shots were fired into his body, killing him. He was left hanging all night, and this morning his body, all covered with the snow which had been falling during the night, presented a ghastly spectacle.

A coroner's jury was empaneled this morning and viewed the body. It is reported here that the jury rendered a verdict that the deceased came to his death at the hands of parties unknown to the jury.

Barnes was about thirty five years old and leaves a wife and several children.

There were not over fifty men engaged in the lynching at any time, and not over twenty were in the crowd that took the keys from Marshal Rickman.

The sheriff and a posse of men arrived in Guthrie from Elkton a few minutes after the hanging occurred. They were informed when they got to Guthrie that they would find their man down at the jail, but that he was dead.

THEY LEAD THE ARMY

HOME LIFE OF BALLINGTON BOOTH AND HIS WIFE.

The Husband Commands the Salvationists of America and Has an Able Assistant in His Spouse—Her Health at Present Is Not Good.

[Special Correspondence.] MONTCLAIR, N. J., Dec. 8.—Ballington Booth, marshal of the Salvation Army in America, lives with his wife and two babies at 45 Park street, in this village. The house they occupy is not a pretentious one.

MRS. BALLINGTON BOOTH.

If you enter the modest porch that shades the front door and pull the bell you will be admitted to a narrow entry hung about with uniforms and caps and sashes and flags of the Salvation Army. The dumpy English servant girl who will open the door bears the distinct stamp of the Army on her face. She will listen to your message and comment on it with much confusion of aspirates, and if you convince her that you should be admitted she will take you into the plainly furnished room where the marshal of the forces receives his visitors.

Ballington Booth and his wife are devoted to their work. Mrs. Booth, as the world knows pretty well by this time, was delicately reared in an English home, and gave up all the pleasures and comforts of her early life to take up the heavy burdens of the Salvation Army when she married the son of the army's founder. She has never spared her inadequate strength since she first laid the cause next her heart, and the newspapers have told the pathetic story of her breakdown during the recent continental congress of the army in New York after the dedication of her baby to the work of its parents. Her health is now very fragile, if not completely shattered.

The work of Mrs. Booth is, if anything, more arduous and it is probably more effective than that of her husband. It has been her desire to carry the Gospel work alike into the highest and the lowest places. She is a person of much refinement, and she it was who first succeeded in getting the members of New York's Four Hundred to give some countenance to the movement. Her meetings in the parlors of Murray Hill and other aristocratic sections of the metropolis have brought forth substantial financial fruit. Turning from this work, for which she is eminently fitted, she has felt it her duty to plunge into the slums. There she has led the vanguard, and is known personally quite as well in the lowest tenement houses as in the residences fronted with brownstone. Owing to her personal exertions the army has recently opened its first refuge for fallen women in New York. The location of this institution has been kept secret so far, as it is not desired to make it a place of resort for sightseers.

Whatever may be thought of the peculiar methods of Marshal Booth and his self sacrificing wife, it must be conceded that their motives are not mercenary. The regular salary of a Salvation Army officer is but seven dollars a week if the officer be single, ten dollars a week if he be married, with one dollar extra for each child in the family. At this rate Marshal Booth would receive but twelve dollars a week, and it is stated that he does not always accept that sum in full. It goes without saying that he could not pay the rent of his Montclair cottage and support his family on this sum, and Mrs. Booth devotes her entire time to the Army.

I. D. MARSHALL.

COL. H. CLAY KING.

The Washington Post Comments on the Prospect of His Pardon.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—Yesterday's Post, commenting on reports that Gov. Buchanan may pardon Col. H. Clay King, says: "It is hardly comprehensible that Gov. Buchanan will close his administration with an exercise of the power that even the most charitably disposed would regard as questionable propriety, yet it may be that the very fact of his going out of public office so soon will render him less sensitive to criticism and reconcile his conscience with an act that, under the full pressure of official responsibility, he would hesitate to perform. It will probably occur to disinterested citizens, friends of neither party of one of the most lamentable tragedies that ever took place in Tennessee, that an obtaining commutation of his sentence, Col. King got it all which he was entitled, and that it were better to let this matter rest as it is. The majesty of the law is vindicated in part by his imprisonment, but we are unable to see why justice should go wholly unsatisfied by his pardon."

THE SPECIAL JUDGESHIP.

Judge Lorton Very Properly Declines to Talk About the Matter.

The following is taken from last evening's issue of the Banner:

"A Banner reporter asked Judge Lorton, of the Supreme court, for a statement concerning the placing of Judge Dickinson on the bench to fill the vacancy caused by the absence of Judge Turney without a commission from the Governor.

"Judge Lorton replied: 'That is a court matter, and we have nothing to say concerning it. The court has decided the question, and we cannot afford to go into a newspaper discussion about it.'

"A number of lawyers were approached for opinion on the subject, but each one expressed a desire to be not quoted. Nearly every one of them said words to this effect: 'I have not looked into the matter particularly, but if the litigants, and the lawyers representing litigants, and the other judges agree to allow Judge Dickinson to sit, I suppose it is all right. This is done in all other courts frequently. The purpose of the thing is manifestly to save the State an extra Supreme Judge's salary, and Buchanan is showing his littleness by opposing it.'

POOR OLD PIERCE.

The Worst Whipped Man Except Som Watson.

The Honorable Pierce Said to be Roosting Lower This Session than He Did At the Last.

Among the outgoing Congressmen is Rice A. Pierce, of Tennessee, says the Washington correspondent of the Courier Journal, known as Bland's lieutenant when any silver measure is before the House. An engaging talker, full of vim and exceedingly dogmatic, Mr. Pierce was very active, but it is probable he did for coinage more harm than good. It is always better to pull than to push on the floor of Congress. Full of human nature, a Congressman can be persuaded more easily than he can be driven. The Hon. Pierce undertook to drive old Josiah Patterson, of the Memphis district, into voting for the consideration of the Stewart Silver bill. He failed, and when he fell, in the most dramatic manner, in most threatening language, he said to the old war horse from Memphis: "I'll see to it that you are not re-elected because of this vote of yours, which you know to be contrary to the views of your constituents." Patterson intimated that Pierce would have enough to do to mind his own affairs, and if the people of the Memphis district did not like the way he was representing them they could find another man for that job and welcome. The result was that Patterson went home, was nominated without obstacle, and is returned to the next Congress by the greatest majority given any Democrat in Tennessee, while Pierce was defeated for re-nomination, bolted, was supported by Independents, Populists and Republicans and defeated by a tremendous majority. The Hon. Pierce will roost lower this session than he did last. He is the best whipped man in the House save Tom Watson.
