NEBLETT & GRANT, Local Editors.
FRIDAY, JANUARY 29, 1858.

Our Chronicle Office over W. H. Bryarly's Store.

We take pleasure in announcing to the readers of the CHRONICLE that we shall commence in our next paper the publication of a new story by our Senior Editor, and shall continue it in each successive issue until completed.

All our readers must remember the charming stories we have already been favored with from Mr. Thomas' pen, and will we know be gratified at the announcement we now make.

We have had the pleasure of looking over the initial chapters of this new story, and we can assure our friends, that if the interest which characterizes them is sustained in the succeeding one, (and no doubt it will even be greatly increased) it will prove the best story Mr. T. has ever written.

Let every one who is now a subscriber to this paper commence to read the story in our next issue, and we advise all who are not now subscribers to become so, at once for Mr. Thomas' story alone will more than repay the cost of the paper.

We notice that Col. Faxon, in the last number of the Jeffersonian, attempts to excuse a transaction exceedingly dishonoring to the dignity of his new title. He gives the same false coloring to his inglorious flight, which Falstaff did to Prince Hal, concerning his encounter with the "eleven men in buckram." The Colonel well knows, that the military company that elicited, so eloquent an address from Gen. Haskell, called not upon him for a specimen of his stirring oratory, but only wished to be drilled by so splendid a soldier, and receive instructions from so renowned a tactician. Had his avowed motive, of not wishing to eclipse our distinguished visitor, been sincere, he would certainly have taken command of the company in the outset and conducted them in his own person to Gen. Haskell, thus adding the attraction of his majestic presence, and the high honor of his great military reputation.

With the deepest awe of his despotic power, we must say that his retreat was the grossest manifestation of an unsoldierly timidity we ever witnessed. The Colonel seems to admire the adroitness of his manœuvre in escaping from his own soldiers, but we much fear his strategy is better suited to the skulking ambuscade of Indian warfare, than the manly tactics of the American soldier, that loves to meet his foe in the open field. We happen to know the nature of the Col's hiding place, which he terms "refuge in a neighboring store."

We were told by the Merchant of said store, that long after the clamorous calls of the "Guards" had ceased, and the notes of their drum had died away in the distance, a trembling form, striped by the dark soot into the horrible likeness of an Indian warrior, dropped from his chimney into the ashes below; and he recognized the unmistakable lineaments of the distinguished Colonel. Crawling out of the ashes, he crept stealthily to the back door, and opening it, sprang out, and was soon lost from view in the devious windings of those back alleys. A solitary pedestrian pursuing his lonely way through those unfrequented lanes, saw him clear a tremendous cedar palisade at one superhuman bound. Rushing like a meteor through M. Koin & Bailey's lower cabinet rooms, the astonished workmen had only time to reach the door through which he passed out, and catch a glimpse of his streaming skirts, as he entered the cellar beneath his office just opposite. Thus hath the vainglorious Colonel, who in all his "pride of place" threatened to have us shot for want of respect, committed a deed that should be punishable only with the "rope." Greatly staggered in our faith in appearances, when we witness such arrant poltroonery in one, from whose formidable port, and heroic antecedents, we had expected such unfading laurels, in future fields.

The following is the amount of Taxable property, in this County, for the last year:

NEGROES FOR SALE.—On next Monday, County Court day, Mr. Thos. Ramey, the Sheriff, will sell some very valuable negroes. These slaves were levied upon as the property of West Jordan and others, and are very likely. Terms cash.

ANY person who may wish to purchase a real good brass instrument, one of the leading instruments in a band, can find one for sale cheap, at this office.

W. F. BIBB's show windows are filled with nice things—the chief of which is a pyramid of Candy, put up by his workmen, which is indeed beautiful.

Note the change made in Miss Mary Beaumont's advertisement.

HERMAN MELVILLE.—The Fifth Lecture to the Literary Association, was delivered on last Friday evening, by this distinguished author. With our small skill in criticism, we feel entirely unable to do justice to the production of so ripe a genius and so pure a taste. Indeed the subject was so faultless in conception and execution, that its subtle yet marvellous beauty escaped only the most appreciative sensibility and the most cultivated discernment. With that true instinct of genius, which turns aside from lofty and high sounding themes, Mr. Melville selected one of unpretending title, from which to deduce noble and inexhaustible thought, and quiet, but none the less striking philosophy. His subject was "Statues in Rome;" and having been himself a wanderer in that grand old city, whose very name fires the imagination of the classic student with the magic of storied antiquity, he brought those mute forms of a distant age out of the dim and dreamy haze of fancy, into the bright and vivid light of reality. He had looked with no unthoughtful eye upon those glorious masterpieces of ancient genius from which the artists of a modern day have drawn all their inspiration. Unbiased by the possibilities of fancy, he traced in the marble features of those great warriors, philosophers, statesmen, and poets, whose names are now almost deified, the same lineaments of passion, and frailty, that blend in the noblest faces of our own day; and though thus stripping them of their divinity, made them dearer to us as men. The description of the ideal statuary of Rome, held us breathless by its wonderful nicety of appreciation, and subtlety of expression. Of all the tributes of genius to the Apollo, and Venus de Medici, those statues that "enchant the world," we never read one more worthy of their divine beauty. The expression of doubt, and dark groping of human speculation, in the ideal statuary of that age, when the old mythology was passing away, and men's minds had not yet reposed in the new faith, was finely portrayed. A most striking and beautiful thought was introduced, when speaking of the equestrian statues of Rome, and the expression of untamed docility, rather than conquered obedience which their artists have given to the horse, the lecturer deduced the enlarged humanity of that elder day, when man gave himself none of those upstart airs of superiority over the brute creation which he now assumes.

We do not remember in all our reading to have met with a more beautiful passage, than that in which Mr. Melville described his musings in the Coliseum, and the recurrence of his imagination far back to the day when its mighty walls enclosed such countless throngs to witness the gladiatorial combats, and the eye of fancy saw many in the vast assemblage who looked not coldly on the dying gladiator whose eyes looked far away to —where his rods had by the Danube lay, There were his young barbarians all at play.

But we hung entranced upon the closing remarks of the lecturer, which vindicated these spiritual productions of the ancient mind from their alleged inferiority to the utilitarian inventions of the present age. Never before was the superiority of art over science, so triumphantly and eloquently sustained. But we will not add more of our feeble praise to a production which, if published, would elicit commendation from the highest critical sources.—Some objected to Mr. Melville's subdued delivery; but if we rightly reflect, we will observe a striking congeniality between this quiet manner and those mute forms that stand still and silent amid the venerable ruins of "ancient Rome."

Those who appreciate the sublimity of Nature, only when the storm is loosed, and are insensible to the grandeur of her noontide silence, felt not the beauty of Mr. Melville's lecture. Those who prefer, what they term truth, and practicality and subjects of every day interest, who relish the strong meat that makes bone and muscle, above that "Nectar of the Gods" that sublimate a finer essence, tasted not of the divine chalice that the lecturer held to their lips. Mr. Melville goes from us, with the appreciation of many pure tastes, and the kindly feelings of many hearts that penetrated through the natural reserve of his character to the noble nature beneath.

K. M'KINNON, at Covington's old stand, on Franklin Street, is selling Confectionaries, of all kinds, upon good terms. He is a clever gentleman, and we bespeak for him a share of public patronage.

We stepped in at the extensive Hardware establishment of McCall, Vanleer & Co., at Nashville, the other day, and saw a very large and imposing stock of Hardware in all its varieties. This firm appears to be doing an extensive business.

THE SALLIE WEST has commenced regular trips from Nashville to St. Louis.—She passes her Wednesday on her upward, and Thursday nights on her downward trips. The officers have our thanks for files of late papers.

MINER, at the sign of the striped pole, on Strawberry Alley, is prepared to show you at short notice. He has, imported from Nashville, an excellent Barber, and can now cut and shave in good style.

GEN. WM. T. HASKELL delivered the sixth lecture to the Literary Association, on last Saturday night. The great prestige of his name drew an overflowing house. The address being decidedly unique in its style and arrangement, it is difficult to criticize it with reference to ordinary standards. It possessed to the last degree one admitted characteristic of the loftiest genius—that is supreme disregard of all the unities. Those dull minds which demand logical arrangement, and are unable to follow the erratic flights of the "divine afflatus," complained of the General's digressions. As for ourselves we watched with unexpressed delight, the meteoric brilliancy and velocity of his motions. Now "he dragged up drowned honor by the locks," now "plucked bright honor from the pale face moon," anon, did light "like Mercury on a heaven kissing hill," and lo! "deep sunken in the shady sadness of a vale."

The subject of the General's lecture was "the distinguished men and women of Kentucky and Tennessee, and parallel between Clay, Calhoun and Webster." He began his theme with an exordium of exceeding taste and beauty, which commended to the good people of Clarksville, the adornment of the little sheet of water, known as "McFall's pond," with a surrounding of iron railing; said railing to be decorated with flowers and shrubbery and thus transformed into "a thing of beauty" to be "a joy forever." We have heard that our worthy Mayor and Aldermen, will consider this proposition at their next meeting. We much fear, however, that their practical minds will not be able to take in so ethereal a fancy. Should the expense be an objection, let them remember that other suggestion of the same fertile minds, that debts are only the interest and not the principal.

After the eloquent peroration, the General introduced his "dramatis personae," and we must here express our mortification at the paucity of great names in Tennessee. If we rightly remember, the "General made mention of but one—'sed ut falli Leo.' We congratulate our sister state on her superabundance of heroes. 'Tis true Gen. Haskell made mention of many, whose acquaintance Madam Fame has not yet made, but she will certainly, since her favorite's recognition of their claims, hasten to atone for her neglect. It behooveth her also to discard her old foggy partiality for Homer, Milton and Shakespeare, and dispense her favors to one of Kentucky's sons, whose superiority over all these great masters of the lyre, the General has abundantly proven. But it is impossible for us in the space of an article to do justice to a literary repast, whose variety would shame the multifarious contents of the witches' caldron in Mecebeth. We must notice however the closing sentences of the General's address. If the exordium was grand, the conclusion swept the soul with the grand symphonies of "the Harp of a thousand strings." He ended by giving the synopsis of a poem, which he says is the "Chef de Oeuvre" of his life, embracing every science, every art, and every subject that has excited human thought, from the days of Adam to our own time. The concentrated essence of all these, he poured upon the audience in one rushing and breathless sentence.

His recent poetical effusions awaken a lively curiosity to hear the wondrous "epic" and we hope he will soon fulfill his promise to deliver it to the Association here.

We give place to the following advertisement, without exactly knowing what our fair friends are "up to." We have no doubt their challenge will be accepted by some gallant bachelor, and we tender them the use of our columns—hoping that the correspondence to follow, will be profitable to them and interesting to our readers:

Two young ladies in quest of an agreeable correspondent, either through the columns of the Chronicle, or post office, would be delighted to find some, who like themselves, are fond of writing. They promise to be very accommodating, writing upon any subject that may be chosen. If it is preferred, they will chronicle the news regularly, in the most approved manner; for which you know ladies are noted the world over. If you would like in your bachelors retreat, to have a sweet little perfumed billet-doux, containing love phrases enough, to set your hearts on fire for a week to come, we are the very ones for you to commence a correspondence with. We throw you the gauntlet gallant gentlemen. If you will accept, direct to "D. V. and L. V." Clarksville, Tenn.

EXEMPTED.—Printers with nine children are to be exempted from taxation in the State of New York.

A very safe exemption. It would afford us pleasure to see the printer who provides for nine children have anything left to be taxed.

McCulloch & Pitman are just in receipt of a fine assortment of New Style Clothing, direct from New York. Call and examine them.

It will be seen, by reference to advertisement, the next session of Stewart College will commence on Monday, first day of February. The faculty is full, and the school every way prepared to fulfill the purposes of its organization.

Mr. Gilbert C. Breed, the accomplished resident engineer of the railroad company, has been elected city engineer for the next twelve months. The appointment is an excellent one.

We made a flying trip to Nashville, last week, and were gratified at its improvements, especially on the public square, where have been reared stately and elegant business houses, of four and five stories, on grounds previously occupied by humble and unsightly buildings. We visited the Methodist Publishing House, and were highly gratified at the large scale of its operations, and at the perfection to which printing has been brought in our State. The Book Bindery, too, connected with this House, is doing a large business, and we saw specimens of binding not surpassed, even in New York. Persons having binding to do, will consult their own interest by patronizing this establishment. We also made a hurried call at the Medical University, which is in a high state of prosperity—the students numbering over three hundred, and the Faculty, able and popular. The Museum, belonging to this School, is one of the best in the West. The skeletons are in the best style of French preparation, and the whole collection is highly creditable to this prosperous Medical School.

CRIMINAL COURT, Judge Turner presiding, has been in session all the week.—The three capital cases from Stewart County, viz: State vs George Atkins, same vs Dr. Rutland, and the same vs Mrs. Norris were continued. Only two felony cases have been tried, viz: State vs Terrance M'Manus, indicted for murder, and Patrick Wade for murder. Owing to the absconding of the most material witnesses to parts unknown, in the M'Manus case the State was not able to obtain a verdict of murder against the defendant,—which crime was clearly proved before the committing court—and the jury found him guilty of manslaughter, and sentenced him to the Penitentiary for three years. The jury in the Wade case had not been able to agree at the adjournment of court last night.

The State vs Maria, a slave, for the murder of Hodges, was continued. State vs Mrs. Hodges, is set for trial to-day.

BETHEL FEMALE COLLEGE. This school has just closed its first session under Prof. Rust and his accomplished and excellent lady. Its success has surpassed all expectations. One hundred and twenty-five young ladies have been in attendance during the session, a larger number, we believe, than ever attended a similar institution in the place, and we learn that the prospect for the next session, which begins on next Monday, is highly flattering. The school deserves abundantly its great success. The Principal and his lady have but few equals in their profession as teachers and disciplinarians, and their corps of assistants is admirable.—Jeffery.

The above compliment is worthily bestowed.

Religious Notices.
Rev. W. D. F. SAWYER, of Nashville, will preach at the Meth. dist. church, next Sabbath morning at 10 1/2 o'clock. Mr. Sawris is one of the ablest ministers belonging to the Conference, and we advise our citizens to go and hear him.

Right Rev. Bishop Otis will hold the Annual Visitation of Trinity Parish on the 14th of February. There will probably be services in the church, on several days, and nights before and after the 14th.

Jeff please copy.
