IN A ROW BOAT.

We're off for a row on the briny Atlantic,
In a boat that's not "bony," nor given to
"slipping."
It won't even "burry," it isn't romantic,
And the water's a harbor, filled up with shipping!

Yet what do we care for the "blue Danube river,"
For Venice, the Rhine, or Geneva's fair
shore!
The splash of a blade, with its ripple and
quiver,
Sings just the same music the universe o'er.
And beneath this tall ship-house—peaked and roomy,
And yonder old hulk, without bowsprit or mast,
We glide into shadows as graceful and gloomy
As the Doge's palace itself can cast.
A ferryboat comes—she's a thing of beauty!
See her colored lights on the waves shine
down;
They're only her signals doing their duty,
But they gleam like jewels in a monarch's crown.

There is no "weird legend" in any quarter,
No "maelstrom" floats to the listening ear,
No "mandolin" tinkles, but over the water
Come fresh, laughing voices, jolly and clear.

And so on we go, in the deepening twilight,
Without any sentiment, romance or stuff!
The same moon gilds all, with its touches of
high light;
We're perfectly happy, and that is enough!
—Bessie Chandler in Brooklyn Magazine.

AMONG THE ARCADIAN.

Happy Homes Which They Found in Louisiana—How They Farm.

"I've been down in Louisiana for a week with the Arcadians—people Long-fellow talks about in his 'Evangeline,' you know; 'Cajins' the darkeys down there call them," said a Northwestern railway conductor recently.

"It's like going back to our great-grandfather's days to go among them. They are the simplest and happiest people I ever saw, and their country is the most beautiful in the world. It was pretty hard when they were driven from their first settlement, but they have cause to rejoice at it. Why, they don't have to work. They just tickle their magnificent soil with the hoofs of their cattle and it laughs a harvest. Old Basil, the blacksmith, had a level head, I tell you. They do not even have to plow for their rice crop. When it stops raining in the spring they ride out on horseback to their rice fields, which are then ponds, and sow the seed—rice broadcast over the water, after which they have nothing more to do till harvest. If the season is dry the seed is scattered over the ground and tramped into the soil by the cattle, which are driven over the field for the purpose.

"July is the month of harvest, and in it the happy 'Cajin' cuts his rice with the primitive sickle and hauls the sheaves home in a clumsy cart, made entirely of wood and drawn by oxen, which are fastened to the tongue by loops passed over their horns. When the harvest is over the grain is trodden out by oxen, as in the days of the patriarchs. It is then ground in a little wooden mill and winnowed in a sieve, when it is ready to be made into bread. See this shirt! It's real homespun—made by a 'Cajin' housewife out of cotton grown in her garden.

"The 'Cajins' are great orange-growers. They have a funny way, too, of selling their crop. A buyer comes out when the trees are in bloom, and, after half a dozen or more whittling matches, a bargain is struck for the prospective crop, the 'Cajin' always demanding and getting half the agreed price in advance. When this business is settled there is nothing more to do but to wait for nature to prepare another harvest."—Chicago News interview.

The Music of the Cable.

I walked down Tenth avenue from High bridge late the other night. It was a warm, moist evening, with a great quiet brooding over the sparsely-settled streets. The cable road cars came and went by almost without a sound, and were quite startling in the suddenness and silence of their progress. But as I walked I was accompanied by a constant chiming and monotonous, but by no means unpleasant, melody. It was the singing of the cable in the groove under the road-bed. The friction of the steel wire over the clotted wheels kept up a perpetual murmur in which notes of music could be clearly distinguished, and now and then would come a sharp chime, as a light blow struck on a ringing glass. At places where there were no houses, and the natural silence was profound, the effect of this rivulet of melody running in its hidden current under my feet was indescribably weird and charming. One of the claims the cable companies make in favor of their cars is their noiselessness. It seems to me that the noise they make, or are the cause of, is the prettiest if not the most useful thing about them.—Alfred Trumble in New York News.

Too Many Orders.

In a letter published in the London Times on the subject of foreign orders and decorations, "Medico" asks why the royal family is perpetually breaking the law in this matter. Nothing can be more strict than the application of the prohibition to distinguished servants of the British crown, who have honorably earned this slight acknowledgment on the part of foreign potentates. And yet the prince of Wales, who has never heard a gun fired in warfare, who has never saved a life, who has never done one single thing to qualify himself in any way for the distinction thrust upon him, is permitted to cover his manly bosom with eagles and lions and lambs, with crosses and stars, until an unknowing spectator would take him either for Marshal Moltke or the ring-master at the Cirque d'Éte.

But a Small Portion.

On a first glimpse of the sea. "Astonishing! Who would have thought there could be as much water as that!" True, and remember you only see what's on top.—Tid Bits.

—OF—

REAL ESTATE.

I will sell at the Court House in Clarksville, Tenn., on Thursday, December 2d, 1886,

the following described city property belonging to the estate of B. O. Keesee, deceased, to-wit:

1 Lot fronting 54 feet on Commerce street, and being 100 feet east of the corner of First street, and runs back north from Commerce street 115 feet.

2 Lots fronting on First street, 25 feet wide, and running back east 100 feet. One of these lots lies on the corner of First and Commerce streets, and runs back with the latter street its full length.

3 A lot on Commerce street just west of and adjoining the lot on which Mr. Senning's store stands, fronting on said street 24 feet and runs back north 100 feet.

4 Lot on north side of Commerce street, west of and adjoining the Clarksville Wagon Company's shop, lot fronting 42 feet on said street and runs back north about 200 feet to an alley.

5 Dwelling House and Lot on Franklin street adjoining and immediately west of the First National Bank, fronting on said street 43 1/2 feet and runs back — feet.

6 Lots 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 40 by 118 feet each, in Williams' addition to the town of Clarksville.

7 Also Lot No. 8 in said addition, which is 20 1/2 by 150 feet. This lot fronts on Water street.

8 Also 3 Lots lying west of Front street and between said street and the river, fronting on said street about 150 feet—part of Lyon's lots.

9 A House and Lot in Third Ward, known as the old French place, 90 by 112 feet.

10 House and Lot in Robert's Addition, being known as Lot No. 25 in the plat of lots sold by Bailey, Smith and Gaulton.

11 3 Lots near the Clarksville Lumber Company's saw mill, fronting on Seavey River road, known as Nos. 5 and 6 in plat of E. H. Thomas' property, 50 feet front and runs back to the river.

12 6 small tracts of land lying about one-fourth of a mile south of Clarksville, adjoining the property of F. P. Gracey. These tracts contain 1.40, 2.05, 1.15, and 1.15 acres, on which there is a good residence known as "111 Top," 19 1/2-16 acres and 19 1/2-16 acres respectively.

13 A plat of all these lands will be exhibited on day of sale. 4 These six tracts are all supplied with spring water sufficient for stock purposes.

14 Also 46 1/2 acres of land in Dist. No. 18, about four miles from Clarksville, known as the old Keesee homestead. There are tolerably good improvements on this tract, and also a district school house. This tract will be divided to suit purchasers, and a plat will be exhibited on day of sale.

15 The following property will be sold subject to the life estate of Mrs. Ed. Turney:
1 Storehouse and Lot on north side of Franklin street, occupied by Keesee & Northington.
2 Storehouse and Lot on south side of Franklin street, occupied by M. L. Joslin.

3 Double Storehouse and Lot on west side of Pulley Square, running back to Spring street, occupied by Oppenheimer.

4 House and Lot occupied by Quint Bonum, colored, fronting 14 1/2 feet on west side of Public square, and runs back 115 feet.

5 2 Lots in the rear of Dr. Trawick's residence, one fronting the alley between Dr. Trawick and Col. Trapp, fronting on said alley 12 feet and runs back 77 feet. The other fronting 12 feet alley next to the Academy property 12 feet and runs back 73 1/2 and 89 1/2 feet. A plat will be shown of the lots on day of sale.

TERMS—One-third cash, balance on a credit of one and two years, with interest from date of sale.
