MADE GOOD IN BATON ROUGE

In the person of Representative Howard Koppel, Algiers seems to have secured one of the most active members in the General Assembly of Louisiana, and the working people have found a friend who stood by them in every measure that came before that body for consideration. Ranging in his activities from securing an elective school board of five members for the City of New Orleans and free ferriage for the school children of Algiers, to securing the first law ever enacted in Louisiana limiting the working hours of a man engaged in any occupation and the protection of pedestrians from the constant danger of death and injury by the passage of a law requiring fenders on all street cars throughout the state, Mr. Koppel was ever ready to take an active part in the passage of any measure tending to benefit the district he represents and the state at large.

In his gallant, though losing fight for the full crew bill and his valuable aid in passing the twice-a-month pay day bill, Representative Koppel has won himself a host of friends in the Fifth District. Aside from the introduction of these two measures he was the father of a bill requiring railroad companies to block the angles in all frogs and switches so that trainmen might not catch their feet in these dangerous crevices and be held while trains literally mowed them down. This measure has received the signature of the Governor. The Koppel bill requiring an adequate number of fire escapes on factory buildings, stores, schools, asylums, hospitals, hotels, lodging houses, etc., passed both the House and Senate, but unfortunately, Governor Hall permitted it to receive a pocket veto. Other bills introduced by the Algiers representative included an act requiring owners of cotton factories to provide employees with mouth shields to breathe through in order that they would not have to inhale the small particles of cotton that float through the air in these places; a bill requiring the state to pay the members of the militia $25 per year for each man who attended 25 drills during the year; a bill providing for the respectful treatment of the American flag. This bill awakened nation wide comment, so much so that President Taft and the Secretary of State of the United States wrote letters commending the bill.

The Koppel bill requiring railroad companies to equip all locomotives with electric headlights was killed by the Railroad Committee of the House, after a hearing at which railroad officials from Chicago, Louisville, Natchez, Vicksburg, Kansas City, Cincinnati and New Orleans argued with the committee. At this same committee meeting the bill introduced by the Algiers member requiring railroad companies to build sheds at division terminals to protect employees engaged in work on ear equipment from rain and sun was also reported unfavorably.

The passage of the law limiting the working hours of stationary firemen to eight, which bill was introduced and passed by Mr. Koppel, as the first law of its kind in the state, brought forth a shower of congratulations on the introducer from the officers of the Central Trades and Labor Council and other labor leaders who were in Baton Rouge at the time. In aiding the members of the New Orleans fire department Mr. Koppel rendered efficient service in securing representation for the rank and file of the department on the board of pension commissioners. The original bill provided for the Mayor, the chief, the secretary and two assistant chiefs to comprise the board, while the Koppel amendment removed the assistant chiefs and placed four of the men below the grade of assistant chief on the board in their places.

Mr. Koppel also aided Captain Heaney, the legislative delegate of the firemen, in attempting to secure the passage of a law taxing insurance companies one per cent, the proceeds of this tax to be used in paying pensions to firemen's widows and orphans, but the firemen were unsuccessful in their fight for this bill.

In the fight to abolish the Fire Rating Board and to change the Fire Prevention Bureau, thus breaking up this insurance trust, the Algiers member was again one of the leaders and was especially commended by the committee of citizens who were fighting this trust.

Among the labor measures for which the Algiers representative voted were the following: An act defining the word "laborer" and "laborer's wages"; the act granting a privilege in favor of employees; the act prohibiting employers from loaning money to their employees at more than the legal rate; the measure requiring printing establishments and newspapers to provide better ventilation for their employees; the bill requiring corporations to pay immediately the wages of all discharged employees instead of making such employees wait two or three weeks as is now the custom in places; the bill permitting employees of railroads to furnish a private bond instead of having to use the bonding company selected by the "road." The act requiring employers to discontinue paying employees in checks on their commissaries and pay in cash instead; the bill giving the State Railroad Commission the right to investigate short register cases and reinstate conductors found not guilty of defrauding the street railway companies. At present these men are discharged by some companies without a hearing. The bill requiring street railroads to furnish seats for motormen and conductors and the bill prohibiting negroes and whites from working together in the same room, as is the case in many canning factories at present. Among other measures for which he voted were those requiring the election by the people of United States Senators; the Commission Government bill; the bill prohibiting dual office holding; the income tax measure; the bill granting an increased appropriation for the insane; the bill increasing pensions for Confederate veterans; the bill granting Loyola College and the Ursuline Nuns the right to grant degrees; the bill providing for a Tuberculosis Commission and the establishment of a hospital for the treatment of consumption; the anti-trust bill; the bill requiring railroads to drain their roadbeds; the bill requiring tax assessors to publish their assessments; the bill requiring railroads to furnish lights at street crossings; the bill exempting new steamship companies and railroads from taxation for a certain number of years. This last bill it is said will enable the owners of the Grand Isle road to at once proceed with the construction of their line to Grand Isle and construct other lines down the river past Bellechasse and up the river to Amesville.
