His Method Of Revenge

BY RUTH GRAHAM

Shortly before the breaking out of the French revolution Ambrose Sinclair, a young South Carolinian, went to Germany, where he attended a university. He was rather inclined to arms than to study and became proficient in the use of the small sword rather than writing theses. Having finished the university course, he went to Paris. His father forwarded him a letter of introduction to Benjamin Franklin, who was then representing the new American republic at the court of Versailles, and young Sinclair was admitted into the society of the court circle.

Sinclair fell in love with Mme. Orelle de Torcelles, and his passion was returned. Her brother, the Duke of Lascelles, to get rid of the American, conspired with the Count de Beauville, a rejected suitor of his sister, and the two secured his arrest and imprisonment.

Having got the young man into the Bastille, it was not difficult to keep him there, for they gave instructions to his jailer not to permit him to communicate with any one, especially the American embassy. Sinclair remained there for several years, gaining his freedom only when the mob opened the prison by battering down the gates of the Bastille.

One would suppose that he had had enough of the France of those times and would go home at once. When he had been shut up the country was peaceful; now it was a boiling pot. Having been shut up by royalists, he might now dread being guillotined by revolutionists. But Sinclair had only one thought—to find the men who had imprisoned him and be revenged, for he had heard while in prison that Jules de Lascelles had died.

The French royalists were only beginning to get out of France. Sinclair learned that the Duke of Lascelles had been arrested on a charge of being an enemy to the revolution, but the Count de Beauville was still free. Sinclair went to the leader of the revolution of that time, told him how he had been imprisoned on a charge of inciting insurrection and asked that the Duke of Lascelles be liberated that Mr. Sinclair might seek revenge by fighting him. The request was granted.

The next day a prison official announced to the duke that he might go free. Lascelles, who had been expecting death by the guillotine, was overjoyed. But when at the prison gate he recognized the man he had thrown into prison several years before he turned pale.

"Come with me," said Sinclair, who led the way into a courtyard near by, where two gentlemen were waiting, the one to second Lascelles, the other Sinclair. Lascelles, having escaped death by the guillotine to meet it by an enemy's rapier, fought desperately, but he was no match for one who had championed his corps at Heidelberg. Sinclair played with him for a time as a cat would with a mouse, then with a "Take that for your villainy," ran him through.

Sinclair next sought the Count de Beauville. He found it difficult to find him, for the count had been proscribed, and the revolutionists were looking for him as well as the man whom he had imprisoned. Sinclair got on his track through information given by one who had seen him in court and supposed him to be a sympathizer with the royalist cause. Sinclair found his man, but would neither give him up to his enemies nor seek revenge or information that had been imparted on the supposition that it was given to a friend. He proposed to De Beauville that they journey together to Belgium, passing as two Americans. De Beauville could not understand why, since Sinclair had him in his power, he did not turn him over to the revolutionists, and why the man he had injured should help him to get out of the country was indeed a mystery to him. However, there was nothing for him to do but to accept the offer.

Sinclair possessed a passport, though of a date several years gone by, as an American citizen. He suggested to De Beauville that he travel ostensibly as his servant, and the two thus passed beyond the Paris gates. A number of times during their journey they were held up by revolutionists, but every time Sinclair, by showing his passport and ordering De Beauville about as his servant, but, most of all, by his cool assurance, secured a passage for himself and his enemy. At last they reached the frontier. They passed the border in the night, and De Beauville slipped away into the darkness and Sinclair knew that the emigres escaped his enemy.

JUVENILE BASEBALL.

Pelican Stars and Algiers Stars Play Tie Game.

The batteries of the game were S. Talbot and Lefare for the Pelicans and Gerrets and Abbot for the Algiers Stars.

The Pelican Stars and the Algiers Stars played one of the most interesting games ever witnessed in Algiers. It was a pitcher's battle between J. Gerrets and S. Talbot. The Pelican Stars did very fine work as they played a team that was over their age. The game was called at the end of the seventh inning on account of a dispute and the game was called a draw. The Pelicans will do some hard practicing this week, so next Sunday when they play that team will take their money in the first inning just as they did on Sunday, Jan. 24th, 1914. The features of the game were the fielding of J. Finley and S. Tranchina, and pitching of Gerrets and Talbot. The Pelicans got two hits and the Algiers Stars got but three. A large crowd witnessed the game and was pleased to see the Pelicans do such fine work.

Algiers Stars as follows: J. Gerrets, pitcher; Abbot, catcher; R. Gallin-house, first base; J. Tufts, second base; C. Umbach, third base; T. Buchholz, shortstop; B. Barrett, center field; C. Corbett, left field; F. Ryan, right field. The Pelican Stars line-up was published last week.

Summary: Two-base hit—McCord, Buchholz. Struck out—By Gerrets 9, by Talbot 8. Base on balls—Off Gerrets 4, off Talbot 3. Hits apportioned—Off Gerrets 2, off Talbot 3. Hit pitched ball—By Talbot (Gallinghouse). Time of game—1 hour 35 minutes. Umpire—T. Morrison.

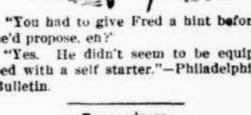

His Better Half. Tellit—Yes, Binklers got married on his pay envelope and his nerve. Asker—Indeed! Tellit—Yes, and his wife took both inside of a month—Chicago Daily News.

Generous Offer. Pa—My daughter has been used to an automobile, and her husband must have one. Young Man—I think he ought to have one too. What make are you going to get us?

A Little Encouragement. "You had to give Fred a hint before he'd propose, eh?" "Yes. He didn't seem to be equipped with a self starter."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Forwardness. Uncle—Well, you young rascal, how many thrashings have you had at school today? Nephew—I can't remember, uncle. I never trouble about what goes on behind my back.—Pittsburgh Press.

Coming Down With a Crash. Leading Lady—Who was it that said "hitch your wagon to a star"? Theatrical Manager (sadly)—I don't know. But I do know that my wagon seems to have been hitched to a falling star.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Selfish Sympathy. Buggins—Have you heard that Bullion, the millionaire, is dead. Briggs—Yes, I'm awfully sorry. Buggins—Why, he's no relative of yours, is he? Briggs—No; that's why I'm sorry—Pittsburgh Press.

A Case of Repentance

By MARGARET C. DEVEREAUX

We have usually presumed that repentance must come before death.

Eleanor Blake lost her father when she was a little girl, and her mother took for a second husband one William Markland, a widower with a son, at the time of the marriage twelve years older than his stepfather. The widow was very poor, and Mr. Markland was rich. His son, Joseph, was a singular youth, sometimes under the influence of pure and noble emotions and sometimes apparently swayed by the devil himself. When he was in the former condition he was very kind to Eleanor, but when in the latter he seemed to hate her.

Eleanor was a favorite with her stepfather and he hoped when she grew to be a woman she would marry his son, for he was aware of the latter's Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde disposition, and he believed that she would be able to tide him over his evil periods, but he only wished for this; he did not attempt to bring it about. Eleanor's mother died when she was fifteen years old, and after being made again a widower Mr. Markland's affection for his little stepdaughter was much enhanced. His son's periods of wickedness seemed to be increasing on him and were a source of distress to his father.

Then Joe Markland, when Eleanor was seventeen years old, delighted his father by showing evidence that he was falling in love with his stepfather. Eleanor, however, seemed to regard him only as a brother, but as such was extremely fond of him. He asked for a different love, and when she told him that it was not possible for her to give it to him he fell into one of his wicked states and treated her shamefully.

Joe Markland disappeared one day and was not seen at home again for a long while. Meanwhile his father failed in health, and Eleanor was his sole comfort. She considered it her duty as well as her preference to remain single and to minister to him, though she had many suitors. All this time no one knew where Joe Markland was till a few months before his father died, when Eleanor received a letter from him evidently written in one of his angelic moods. He regretted that she could not love him, but did not blame her. He wrote to ask her forgiveness for the way he had treated her.

Eleanor wrote that his father could not live long and begged him to come home and give the invalid what comfort he could during the short time that remained before death. Joe wrote that he would come at once; but, though only a few weeks were needed for the journey, he did not arrive for several months. He reached home the day his father died, and it was perhaps as well that he did not arrive sooner, for, though he showed no outward signs of his mood to those who did not know him well, he was, nevertheless, in one of his devilish conditions. His father was barely able to bid him goodby and whispered to him that he hoped he would some day secure Eleanor for his wife.

Joe took charge of the household and household affairs till after the funeral, when a search was made for the will. No will was found. Joe, being sole heir at law, took possession of the property and told Eleanor that if she would marry him he would turn over the management of it to her. Eleanor refused. Quite properly, knowing as she did that her stepfather desired the match, she might have yielded, but she saw that Joe was at the time not his better self.

Joe Markland remained at home long enough to put his estate under a competent manager, who he directed to pay his sister $50 a month and permitted her to remain in the household.

One morning looking out of an upper window she saw her stepbrother coming. Though some distance from her, he appeared bedraggled. He was walking rapidly, and she had scarcely seen him when she heard him at the door. She ran down to meet him, but he was not where she had expected to find him. Thinking he had entered before her, she went into the living room. There stood Joe with a heavenly look on his face, such as she had often seen there when he had become repentant. She was about to spring toward him when she noticed that he was dripping with water. And singularly enough there was a salt odor about him. She ran out of the room to get something in which to wrap him till he could change his clothing, and when she returned with a blanket she had snatched from a bed Joe was not there.

What had become of him? She was about to run into the hall to look for him when she noticed on a table a folded document. She took it up and found it soaked with water. Clinging to it was a fine strand of seaweed.

The paper was found to be a will of William Markland, leaving all his property to his stepdaughter, Eleanor Blake.

Eleanor was found lying on the floor in a swoon, and an illness followed. When she recovered she said that she had found the will in the attic under a leak in the roof. Soon after this news came of the death of Joe Markland. He had been drowned trying to swim across an inlet on the coast of Tasmania.

Had he stolen the will while his father was lying dead, possibly in the same room with him?

State of Louisiana, Parish of Orleans, City of New Orleans. Be it known that on this twenty-sixth day of the month of January, in the year one thousand nine hundred and fourteen, before me, Wynne Grey Rogers, a notary public in and for the Parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana, therein residing and in the presence of the witnesses hereinafter named and undersigned, personally came and appeared the undersigned parties, who declared unto me, notary, that availing themselves of the laws of the State of Louisiana, in such cases made and provided they do, hereby form themselves into a corporation for a term of ninety-nine years from this date, to be known as the B-I-N-O Jewelry Company, and for the purpose of buying and selling jewelry and other merchandise on the installment plan or otherwise, and shall have all the powers granted by law to such corporations and more especially the power to contract, sue and be sued in its corporate name, to hold, receive, lease, purchase, sell, convey, mortgage and hypothecate property both real and personal and to name and appoint such officers, employees and agents as its interest and convenience may require. Article II. The name and title of this corporation shall be B-I-N-O Jewelry Company, the domicile whereof shall be in the City of New Orleans, State of Louisiana. Article III. All citations or other legal process shall be served on the president and in absence or inability to act, on the vice president and in the absence of both of these or their inability to act, on the secretary. Article IV. The objects and purposes of this corporation shall be to engage in the manufacture of and in the business of buying and selling jewelry and other merchandise on the installment plan or otherwise, and shall have all the powers granted by law to such corporations and more especially the power to contract, sue and be sued in its corporate name, to hold, receive, lease, purchase, sell, convey, mortgage and hypothecate property both real and personal and to name and appoint such officers, employees and agents as its interest and convenience may require. Article V. The capital stock of this corporation is hereby fixed at five thousand ($5000) dollars divided into five hundred shares of ten dollars ($10.00) each, payable in cash, for services rendered and property actually furnished and delivered or their equivalent at the discretion of the Board of Directors. This corporation shall begin business as soon as three thousand ($3000) dollars of its capital stock is subscribed, two hundred shares of said stock shall be held for the benefit of the Corporation as Treasury Stock. Said Treasury Stock shall be sold for cash only, and at such price as the Board of Directors may fix as they may deem to be the corporation's best interests, or may sell the same on installments, holding the stock as collateral until fully paid for. Article VI. The affairs of this corporation shall be managed by a Board of Directors composed of four stockholders to be elected annually, by ballot, on the first Monday of February or as soon thereafter as possible. Each share of stock shall have one vote in a stockholder's meeting to be represented in person or by proxy. Article VII. Before any stockholder shall sell or otherwise dispose of the said shares, he shall first offer to the Board of Directors, whose duty it shall be to notify each stockholder in writing and each stockholder shall have three days in which to accept and purchase the said stock at its book value, in proportion to the amount of his or her holdings in said corporation. Article VIII. This charter may be amended or this corporation may be dissolved by three-fourths of the stock represented at a meeting held after ten days' notice in writing mailed to the stockholders, and in case of dissolution the Board of Directors shall act as liquidators.
