OBITUARY

MAHONEY—On Friday, Jan. 21st, at 9 o'clock a. m., John J. Mahoney died, after a lingering illness. Mr. Mahoney was born here forty-nine years ago, but for many years had traveled throughout the country, as he was an actor by profession. Ill health, however, caused him to give up his profession and a short time ago he returned here to reside with his sister, Miss Kate Mahoney, and his brother, Wm. Mahoney. Deceased was the eldest son of the late John Mahoney and Catherine Ward. In addition to his sister and his brother, a niece, Miss Sallie Pearson, survives. The funeral took place Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock from the Mahoney home, 245 Verret street. Interment was in Greenwood Cemetery.

FIRST CITY COURT.

M. Abascal & Bro., Ltd., vs. M. L. Bonneval, judgment for plaintiff, $86.68.

The Algiers Manufacturing Company, Ltd., vs. L. E. Sivad et al, $7.75 contract.

ATTACKED OFFICER.

Patrolman John Dillman had a rough time of it Sunday morning at 12 o'clock, when he arrested Sarah Baptiste, a neccess. Like a wild tigress, the woman attacked the officer, biting and kicking at him while he was holding her at Teche and Homer streets, awaiting the arrival of the patrol wagon. The officer had to use his night stick and subdue the woman, hitting her on the head and inflicting a slight wound, which was dressed at the hospital. The woman is said to be afflicted with fits.

A Henpecked Astrologer.

Lilly, the astrologer and alchemist, could not see for himself sufficiently far into that future which he professed to be able to scan so clearly for others to guard him against making a fool of himself by marrying. He caught a vixen, "of the temper of Mars," to use his own words, and the fact that she brought him $500 as dowry did not count for much in the way of compensation, seeing that "she and her relations cost him over $1000."—London Telegraph.

Scriptural Misquotations.

"He who runs may read" sounds very Scriptural, but it is in reality a mutilated version of the verse in the prophet Habakkuk, "Write the vision and make it plain upon the table that he may run that readeth it." Another Biblical misquotation is, "By the sweat of thy brow shalt thou earn thy bread." In the real text in Genesis being, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." And when we pour "oil on the troubled waters" thousands search the Scriptures in vain for the metaphor.—London Chronicle.

A Bismarck Incident.

It used to be the privilege of Austria's representative at any conference of representatives of the German states to smoke, the others refraining. This was supposed to be an acknowledgment of Austria's supremacy. At the first conference that Bismarck attended as Prussia's representative he began to puff smoke across the conference table as soon as the Austrian diplomat lit up. That set everybody present to smoking on equal terms, and Austria's supremacy got a blow.

The Specification.

"That incoercible gossip, Mrs. Gaddy, says she wants to talk business to you."

"I don't doubt it, but it will be everybody else's but her own."—Baltimore American.

Centenarians of the Nations.

Servia, according to statistics printed in England, is particularly the country of centenarians. In that land one man in every 2,200 has lived to be 100 years old. Ireland ranks next in the longevity list. In the Emerald Isle out of every 8,130 of population there is one centenarian. Out of every 45,000 Spaniards only one is a centenarian. Norway has one in about 90,000, England, Scotland and Wales have about one centenarian to every 177,000 of population. France has one in 180,750. Sweden ranks seventh with one in 250,000. Germany has one in 700,000. Denmark has less than one in 1,000,000 of its population, and Switzerland, with all its reputed healthfulness, has none.

Nothing on Him.

When the fat plumber came to work Wednesday morning he wore a new silk cap that immediately attracted the attention of the thin carpenter, who inquired:

"Where'd you get the new mansard?"

"Bought it yesterday," the plumber replied.

"But you had a good hat."

"Yes, but several of my neighbors bought lids like this."

"And is that the reason you got one?"

"Betcha life. I don't want anybody to have anything on me."

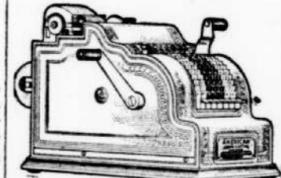

Gazing long and intently at the cap, the carpenter finally ejaculated:

"Well, believe me, they ain't."—Buffalo News.

A Lesson With His Autograph.

An admirer once wrote to Lowell describing his autograph collection and concluding with the remark, "I would be much obliged for your autograph." The reply came, bearing with it a lesson on the correct use of the words "would" and "should," which deeply impressed itself on the mind of the recipient. The response read:

Pray, do not say hereafter, "I would be obliged," if you would be obliged, be obliged and have done with it. Say, "I should be obliged," and oblige yours truly. JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

Cuckoo Superstitions.
Listening to the first cuckoo is not without its risk. According to an old and widespread superstition, the thing a person happens to be doing when he hears the cuckoo's call for the first time in spring is the thing he is destined to do most frequently throughout the ensuing year. It would be awkward if one were doomed to go on listening for cuckoos for a twelvemonth.

Another cuckoo superstition is that the unmarried man or maid will remain in single unblissfulness for as many years as the times the first bird utters its note within their hearing. Well, most maids have two thumbs to fit two ears—and two years.—London Spectator.

Kipling's "Vampire."
Rudyard Kipling's verses written for Sir Philip Burne-Jones' striking painting "The Vampire," were the result of much labor and persistent pursuit of an idea that had long proved quite elusive. When it was finished and Burne-Jones expressed obligations for it Kipling wrote a delightful letter, presenting him with the copyright. "The verses for 'The Vampire,'" he wrote, "which we will call camp poetry, are your property. So if any one wants to dramatize 'em, etch 'em, set 'em to music, paint 'em sky blue, translate 'em into Erse, Celtic or Hittite, use 'em for hair dye advertisement or Church of England hymn, you must deal with that man."—London Opinion.

A Wily Afghanistan.
A man was once condemned in Afghanistan to have his ears sliced off as a minor punishment. He had a powerful friend, however, who was much attached to him. This friend begged the late amer in duly submissive tones to allow him to perform the operation, a favor which was granted. However, the amateur begged the amer to show him what portion of each ear he wished to be removed. The amer accordingly touched them lightly, whereupon the ingenious and courageous person proceeded to quote a passage in the Koran which said that anything touched by the representative of the Almighty became sacred. The despot smiled grimly and forgave them both.

A Constructive Suggestion.
"I am too busy," said the popular author, "to spend any time polishing up my literary style. A man who has to write 100,000 words a week has no time for such trivialities."

"Then," said the critic, "you should employ a literary valet to do it for you—to keep your punctuation marks in order, to brush off your ideas, to manicure your phrases, to press your paragraphs which are inclined to bag at the knees and to snip off the frayed edges of your grammar."—Judge.
