"BIG FOUR" OF THE PEACE CONFERENCE

This remarkable photograph of the council of four of the peace conference was taken in front of the Paris residence of President Wilson. He is seen talking with M. Clemenceau, while Premier Lloyd George and Premier Orlando are engaged in an animated conversation.

ECONOMY CORNER

Simple Methods of Cleaning Laces.
 Styles for spring, in blouses and sheer frocks, show a return to hand-sewing and to hand made laces—known as "real" lace—and thus distinguished from machine made laces. Some machine made laces do not suffer by comparison with the hand made article and both varieties are worth caring for. Ordinary laundering is out of the question for them; they must be handled carefully. Now that the touch of real lace is a mark of style and of distinction in dress for spring, valuable heirlooms will either have to be sent to the cleaner or cleaned at home. In order to reappear in milady's outfit for the new season, lace should be soaked before it is washed. Prepare the water for this soaking by adding a teaspoonful of borax to every two cupfuls of boiling water used. When the soiled lace has soaked a few hours or overnight in this water it will wash easily.

Make a lather of hot water and any good soap. Take the lace from the water in which it has been soaked and place it in the soapy water, squeezing it, as if it were a sponge, until it is clean. If the water becomes very dirty prepare a fresh supply and squeeze the lace in it. Then rinse in clean cold water until all the soap is removed. If after this process the lace still has a grimy look it may be boiled. To boil lace put it in a jar and cover it with cold water and pour into this water a little melted white soap. Stand the jar in a saucepan with water enough to half cover the jar, put the lid on the pan and boil for two hours. Lingerie laces may be ironed by pressing them under a thin clean muslin and finally pulling them out with the fingers. They must be thoroughly dried by ironing or they will roughen up afterward. Ironing will serve for the heavier and sturdier laces but some fine and fragile varieties are washed and dried by the following process:
 Wind the soiled lace round a good sized bottle, and then cover the bottle with thin muslin, tacking it on. Fill a kettle with cold water, shaving into it a good-sized piece of white soap and place the bottle in the kettle. Boil for an hour. Pour off the soiled water and add fresh, repeating the process until the water remains clear. Remove the bottle and rinse in several clear cold waters. Take off the muslin and let the lace dry on the bottle. If a little stiffness in the lace is desirable, dip it in skimmed milk. Then fold the lace in a damp cloth until ready to pin out.
 Lace may be pinned out on an ironing board or on a wooden drum which is first covered with cotton wadding and over that with white muslin. Pin the lace along its straight edge, setting the pins close together and at equal distances apart. Then pin out each piece separately. If the lace dries before it is all pinned down, dampen it slightly. Use non-rustable pins, choosing fine ones for tiny picots and larger ones for heavier laces. When lace is old or fragile, or very much soiled, it should be soaked for several hours in pure olive oil before washing.

To Look "Paintable."
 When a woman wants to look "paintable," which is the artists' word for picturesque, she wears black velvet. No texture holds such charm of color in its weave as velvet. It drapes into exquisite folds, softens every line of the body and enhances every contour of the face. A beautiful complexion finds its most effective foil in velvet. Black is the most popular choice of the picturesque velvet gowns which are seen on the most stunningly dressed women. Next in favor comes brown with a running to seal and occasionally golden or tobacco brown. With a brown shade of velvet, kolinsky trimmings are very much used. The golden brown tones of this fur merge beautifully into the shadows of the velvet.

Black in Lingerie.
 New French lingerie has in most instances a touch of black, either in lace or ribbon, and many striking and unusual colors and color combinations add interest to the latest creations. Some all-black sets are to be seen.

The sailors on the merchant vessels operated by the shipping board have plenty of amusement in their times of leisure. The photograph shows a boxing bout at a shore station.
