

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale
 BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER
 THE AMERICAN REDSTARTS.

"Come on, Redstarts," said Leader Redstart, "it is time to go North. We have been South during all of the cold weather and now we will move and have a change of air and scene."
 So all of the Redstarts flew up North and there they built nests of grasses, which they placed in bushes and in trees.
 They laid little white eggs speckled with brown and they sang, "Che-wee, he-wee, che-wee!"
 Mr. Richard Redstart saw Miss Lottie Redstart and asked her if she would not kindly be his mate and as he thought he would make a very nice mate she said she would be delighted.
 And what nice mates they were! They were happy all of the time and they loved the beautiful springtime and seeing all the blossoms come out and the trees decorating themselves with lovely green leaves.
 "We like to be in the tree tops and we like to be near the ground; it makes no difference," said Mr. Richard Redstart.
 "We are happy anywhere," said Mrs. Richard Redstart.
 "Let us open and close our tails and admire our beautiful feathers," said Mr. Richard Redstart, and Mrs. Richard Redstart thought that would indeed be a pleasant thing to do.
 "You have such a handsome coat of black and red and white," said Mrs. Richard Redstart.
 And Mr. Richard Redstart answered, "You have such a lovely gown of gray and white and yellow."
 "It took several years to get your new black feathers, didn't it?" asked Mrs. Richard Redstart.
 "Ah, yes," he said, "but that is as should be. I was mottled, or speckled before, but I waited patiently, for I knew I would get my black feathers before long, at least I knew would take several years.
 "But to my mind, Mrs. Redstart, I care more for things we have to wait for. If we could have everything at once, just when we wanted it, somehow it wouldn't be the same. I don't

"Admire Our Beautiful Feathers."
 "I can't wait for everything, it is beautiful feathers and riches and some are things it is better to wait for."
 "If one has beautiful feathers and riches right away they don't seem to amount to so much. And fame doesn't seem to be so fine unless it has to be worked for, somehow."
 "I think you are right," said Mrs. Richard Redstart.
 "Of course," said Mr. Richard Redstart, "I call myself Richard Redstart, just as you do. And I call you Mrs. Richard Redstart, just as you call yourself that."
 "It is a fine name. But our real family name is American Redstart. We called ourselves by our other name for a little variety or change for ourselves. The family name has always been American Redstart and it will always be American Redstart."
 "That is right and proper, but it is better to have our own little names for ourselves, as we have, just as children have names for each other and for themselves, such as Johnny and Lily and Jimmie and so forth."
 "So forth isn't a name, of course, but understand that, Mrs. Redstart."
 "Che-wee, I understand," said Mrs. Richard Redstart.
 "You're a bright bird," her mate said.

"I can't so bright to understand," said Mr. Redstart, "but you are bright in every way. Your yellow feathers are so bright, too. Yes, when your feathers are bright!"
 "Not so gay and bright as yours," said Mr. Redstart, "for you have reddish-orange feathers and they are just as bright as feathers could be. They are handsome!"
 "Well, we both have nice feathers," said Mrs. Redstart, "so let us admire them, and spread our fine tails and show them all off—all of our feathers."
 So once more they did as Mr. Redstart suggested, and after that he suggested it again and again. And when Mr. Redstart didn't suggest it Mrs. Redstart did, so they had a beautiful time enjoying the bright, pretty feathers which they wore and loved so much!

CHARTER.
 Though it is now claimed that Roger Bacon knew the microscope in the Thirteenth century, he refrained from naming a single germ after himself. There was self-control!

The fact that so few people understand Professor Einstein's theory of relativity may be due to the fact that it suggests no method of improving business or relieving taxation.

The new postal rates to Spain are not yet in force, so you can save at least 8 cents by delaying your response if you have been queried about any castle or "estates" you are supposed to have inherited over there.

AMENDMENT TO CHARTER OF GARCIA STATIONERY CO., LIMITED.

United States of America, State of Louisiana, Parish of Orleans, City of New Orleans. Be it known, that on this fifteenth day of the month of June in the year of our Lord one thousand, nine hundred and twenty-one, and of the Independence of the United States of America, the one hundred and forty-fifth, Before me, Charles I.
