Strategy.

"How do you feel about this political contest?"
"First rate," replied Senator Sorghum. "I have a great advantage."
"But you haven't refuted the charges made against you."
"There lies my advantage. I have let them exhaust their political arguments and mine aren't a bit tired."

Return of the Train.

Trains are used on most of the new evening gowns. For a long time most evening gowns, especially on younger women, have been trainless. Some, to be sure, have had trains. But now most of the new ones have them. With short skirts, all the way around, the train gives a rather odd appearance, for it hangs separately, from the waist, over the very short skirt.

When Making Cakes.

A quick way to clean currants when making cakes is to put the fruit into a colander with a sprinkling of flour and rub round a few times with your hand. It is surprising how quickly the stalks are separated and come through the small holes.

Taffeta Again, but Not Black.

Taffeta will again be brought forward, but women seem to prefer it for informal evening gowns rather than for everyday frocks. With a bullion design of a flowered surface, it will be the smart fabric for dinner frocks as the Louis Philippe styles need it. It is only fashionable in light colors and in white; in black it is taboo.

A Pretty Deception.

Crawford—So you found a package of old love letters you wrote your wife years ago. What did you do with them?

Crabshaw—Changed the dates and sent them to her while she was away in the country.—Puck.

No "Heart Interest."

Here's a name written on this egg. It's 'Guinevere.' How romantic!
"Nonsense," said the dealer. 'Guinevere' is merely the name of the hen that laid the egg. She's a prize fowl."

CLOUDS AND SUNSHINE

By C. L. C.

Mrs. Courtley was a Southern lady and had always lived in a beautiful home in the south—the house was shut away from sight and sound in a green world of its own, surrounded by grand oak and elm trees.

She was admired by all who knew her and was very pretty with a dainty Camellia—like beauty and her marvellously soothing indolent air—made every one love her.

Mr. Courtley was just the opposite he was a tall distinguished looking man expressing great dignity he had the wide intellectual forehead and the keen cold eyes of steel, he gave one the impression of a big cold marble pillow. He had always lived in New York and was a rising young business man.—While on a business trip to the south he had met and married Gwendolen Graham.

In comparison with Mr. Courtley Mrs. Courtley looked so orchid like, so fragile and helpless—he was like an enormous boulder—and a funeral knell struck my heart as the thought flashed across my mind "how unhappy she will be."

Mr. and Mrs. Courtley were at the breakfast table. It was a beautiful morning and Gwendolen decided to go shopping as many articles of her wardrobe needed replenishing. She dreaded so to ask her husband for money, but she was in actual need to supply, her desire.

When Mr. Courtley had finished reading the morning paper—she leaned forward and said "Allen dear" may I have some money? He at once became conscious of her really being there. "Certainly he said, how much do you want?" he pulled out his pocket book and threw a five dollar bill across the table. "Is that enough?" he asked in freezing tones.

Gwendolen's pretty face showed that she was disappointed. I suppose it will have to do, if that is all you can spare dear, but I need so many things. "What do you want to buy?"

One of the department stores? he asked and handed her another five dollar bill. He lingered a moment to his cigar then walked into the hall Gwendolen followed him and when he put on his coat and hat—she held up her face for him to kiss, but he unconsciously walked past her. She closed the door and went back into the dining room, laid her head on the table and the tears rolled down her cheeks, as she thought of her father, mother, her two sisters whose companionship she missed and beautiful home she had given up for Allen and now she sobbed, "he does not love me."
