CLOUDS AND SUNSHINE

By C. L. C.

Losing my darling is hard but it would be easier to bear if you would only be kind to me. Allen Guendolen had come across a little shoe which she held with frantic clutch against her breast—her baby's shoe—she had taken from the little one's foot not many weeks before. "My darling, my baby" she moaned.

"Oh Heavenly Father why was the only happiness of my life taken from me." Going to her husband's side she laid an appealing hand on his shoulder, and said, "Allen, when you shut me out of your heart I am indeed alone."

Allen Courtley sat in stony silence, his face grave and stern his heart too was heaving for the little one. He still felt the soft clinging arms, the little hands that had carressed his face. All night he could hear the sweet little darling calling-calling. It pierced his very soul. "Oh God" he cries aloud too bitter for bearing. "My husband speak to me she pleaded" I cannot stand it. Let us leave this dreadful city and go to my home. He arose from the chair and stood looking at her for a moment, then he left the room.

Falling on her knee's by the chair she buried her face in her hands and sobbed aloud. "What can I do?" "I must leave here or I will go mad." The next morning Guendolen threw a white shawl around her shoulders and crossing the street she rang the bell of Mrs. Carew's home.

"Come in, my dear, I am all alone" said Mrs. Carew, who was a good old Irish woman.

"I have come to you for comfort and advise" Guendolen said "not only is my baby dead but love and hope as well."

"Surely, not so bad as that said the older women," kindly taking Guendolen hand. "Tell me all about it, maybe I can help you, poor child" Mrs. Carew softly stroked the girl's hair, as she said, "my child, marriage sets two souls in such nearness that they obstruct each others vision." Your husband and you are so different, having the warm blood of the south in your veins, while he is colder and more calm, but he loves you my dear, in his way, and his heart is aching too.

"He does not love me" sobbed the girl. "Now don't talk like that" said Mrs. Carew "if he did not love you, your own sense will teach you that he would not have married you. Keep faith in your husband and you will find duty and sacrifice and all the hardships of life have joys hidden in them and always remember my dear "Not my will but thine will be done" "Thank you for giving me so much comfort," Guendolen said, as she kissed the motherly face of Mrs. Carew and went back across the street to her home to try to comfort her husband and start life anew.

ANOTHER QUESTION FOR POLICE JURY

Tick Eradication Means Construction of 30 Mile Fence

In order that the citizens of our Parish may be enlightened on tick eradication, which the Government and the State of Mississippi are engaged in, we take pleasure in commenting upon a clipping taken from the Magnolia Gazette of April 6, 1915.

This article clearly shows that on border lines between counties in the State of Miss., where one county is undertaking to eradicate the tick and the other refuses to do so will cause friction between the citizens living near the border line. Pike and Walthall counties have already declared against the tick, and inasmuch as Pike and Walthall border on the north and extends a distance of thirty miles, in the event that the same rule is applied as outlined in the above clipping, it will be necessary for Washington Parish to bear their one-half of the cost of building fence thirty miles, besides this public road gates must be maintained, thus making it more expensive to fence against the tick as it would to build vats and eradicate the "pesky tick."

Now on this account we sincerely believe the time is opportune for our citizens to get busy and avoid participating in this expense of building and maintaining fences, and to sound our Board of Police and get them to call an election, create a law, and have our Parish freed of the tick.

It has been suggested that it would be an opportune time to agitate this question now in Washington Parish as well as in all of the Fla., Parishes and have the work done at one and the same time thereby costing less and having the work more effectively done. We have already in our Parish some large cattle ranches and improved stock farms, and the fact has already been demonstrated that better cattle can be raised and better prices secured for tick immune cattle than those which have ticks.

These ranches are using their own private dipping vats and ridding their pastures of ticks. There is no good reason why all of our people cannot be benefited in the same way.

Tax-payer.
