Last week we had an article regarding the right of the bicyclist in the road or street, and since then it has occurred to us that so many of them are making use of the sidewalks. This is a different proposition, and under the laws of this city there is a penalty for riding on the side walks, and it is very evident that that is little or no attention paid to this matter. Wherever the fault lies, it should be corrected, and a stop put to riding on the sidewalks, or else let them all ride it. We trust it is not a "privilege character" proposition.

Seeding and planting is the order of the day. Every farmer who may be truly called a farmer is busily employed in putting in his crops. The croaker or paper farmer is sitting about on store boxes at the village store whittling and deploring the state of the weather; "too wet to plow or plant anything" while last week it was too dry. The weather is never just right for those fellows. They like Wilkins Micawber, are waiting for something to turn up, instead of going out to turn up something.

Prompt delivery of bread, Peerless Bakery.

It has not been a long time ago when the high cost of living was discussed that the farmer got the cussing for it. Recently before the farmers had a chance at it and the warehouses, cold storages, etc. were full with all sorts of food stuffs the prices went up like a sky rocket. Investigation showed that speculators were the guilty ones. They advanced prices without good reasons. Haven't heard any complaints about farmers raising prices lately. The speculators are hot at him though because he does not run all of his wheat to market and give them a chance to corner and squeeze the public. The Farmer's Guide.
