

Food Made Me Sick

"First I had pains in my back and chest, then faint feelings at the stomach, and when I would eat the first taste would make me feel sick. Of course I ran down rapidly, and lost 25 pounds. A friend advised me to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and soon my appetite came back. I ate heartily without distress, gained two pounds a week. I took 8 bottles of HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA & never felt better in my life. C. C. ABER, Grocer, Canistota, N. Y."

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS. Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken. When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains in the neck, passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squamous feelings at first. No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Use, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime, and read the Label.

WHITE CITY GOSSIP.

The Great Exposition on the Columbian Fourth of July.

A Memorable Event Among All Nations at the Fourth of July. Features of the Celebration—New Buildings Opened.

Special Chicago Correspondence.

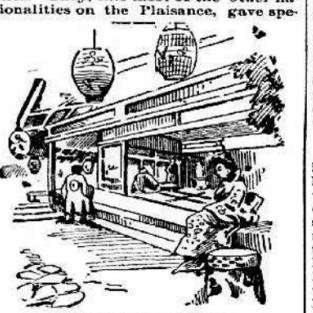

ALL the Fourth of July in Chicago is a lion ever witnessed in Chicago that which has just transpired was far and away the most memorable. Jackson park was the head center of the festivities, but the whole city, including a host of foreign hosts of foreigners in our midst, seemed to partake of the spirit of revelry. For several days previous to the Fourth the interest in the coming event had been waxing gradually, greater as the expected treat drew near, and the pent-up enthusiasm of the patriotic spirits burst forth and found momentary relief in the surreptitious discharge of something with a bang to it, and the louder the bang the greater the relief. The hardy youngsters of the street made himself exceedingly promiscuous by the din which he created whenever he found himself in a place apart from the presence of the blue-coated preservees of the city's peace, and he kept it up so assiduously day and night that quietly-disposed people had a hard time of it trying to get more than three consecutive winks of sleep at a time. This is nothing new, of course, on the Fourth of July, but it did seem as though the fireworks were better this year and went off with a louder bang, and the torpedoes were larger and more reliable and made twice the usual noise. The guns and cannons were on their good behavior also and fairly rent the atmosphere in their efforts to swell the volume of sound that was being poured forth in honor of American independence, Columbus and the world's fair.

As has been said, the grand attraction was Jackson park. There from morning till night no sound of guns or fireworks was heard, at the discharge of any such was in the interest of public peace and property strictly prohibited, but when night came there was racket and fireworks enough to satisfy the wishes of the most hilarious celebrator on the grounds. The pyrotechnics were all in the charge of authorized persons who were skilled in their use, and they were confined to the water front where they were not likely to endanger the precious buildings of the White City. The pieces displayed were some of the finest creations which those skilled in pyrotechnics were capable of putting together, and the crowd of people that witnessed the magnificent spectacle must have numbered nearly two hundred thousand.

MIDWAY PLAISANCE.

The exercises began with speech-making, singing, etc., all of which attracted a goodly portion of the crowd, but the main center of interest during the day was among the foreigners of Midway Plaisance. There everybody was celebrating. Even the inky-skinned women warriors of Dahomey were doing their best to honor the day. They were clothed, as far as it is their custom to be clothed, which at most is very sparingly, in the stars and stripes, and presented a very gorgeous appearance. They, like most of the other nationalities on the Plaisance, gave special equal performances in honor of the occasion, and they seemed to partake fully of the prevailing spirit of revelry. The output from the city was something enormous and must have been in the aggregate very near a half million. The admissions footed up considerably over a third of a million. But the vast number who daily come and go by the "underground" route until the railway ability greatly augment the receipts were they to have paid their passage. At the conclusion of the exercises, which lasted far into the night, a strange sight was presented in the outpouring of the multitude toward the gates. All the avenues were packed with the slowly-moving masses of humanity. As far as the eye could reach in every direction they came swarming and surging through every opening. From all quarters to the exits the stream flowed on until the railway platforms were choked to a standstill. As fast as the trains could load and leave they lopped off the crowd, but departed quickly took the places of the others once. Thus the prodigious con-

THE OLD LIBERTY BELL

How it is Regarded by World's Fair Visitors—Stories Told by the Guards.

This old liberty bell is the one single object of greatest interest among all the splendors and wonders of the White City. To the sturdy, patriotic American it is an object of veneration. To the uneducated, to the ignorant, it is an object of interest and curiosity. If that bell had rung for a free Italy when the lilies of Florence and the white cross of Savoy were dipped in blood in the old Garibaldi days it would have been worshipped in the land of Virgil to-day.

It is cold-blooded and practical; yet American patriotism sometimes finds its vent here even in tears.

Here is a story one of the stalwart Philadelphia reserve policemen told recently, but one of the hundreds of episodes that are constantly falling under their attention. The old bell, in its yellow frame of beams, stands just inside the entrance in the wide vestibule of the Pennsylvania building.

"One day, a couple of weeks ago," began the reserve, "my attention was attracted to an old gentleman who stood just outside the door there. He was a tall, fine-looking, white-haired man, about sixty-five years of age. He stood for about five minutes with his people coming and going past him, and eyes on the bell, but he would wink his eyes. I didn't understand it. At last I got up to get a drink of water, and as I passed him the old gentleman stopped me, and, looking into my eyes, said:

"Young man, I want to tell you that you have the greater honor conferred upon you than has been placed on Grover Cleveland's shoulders."

"How's that?" I asked.

"The honor of guarding that old bell," he went on; "that bell is more to me than anything in these grounds. I've seen it since I was a boy, and I want to see it, and now I'm going home contented, and then he broke right down and began to cry. He walked out on the porch, but in about ten minutes he came back and asked me if he might sit just once on the bench between you and me," said the great big policeman.

"I would have liked to let him do it, but I told him it was against positive orders to let anyone touch or handle it. Then he left."

Thousands of stories of love for that bell, for that old bell, being here have been missed right here for want of a historian. The other afternoon, shortly before two o'clock a man with a lunch-bag under his right arm, and leading a little lad of eight by the hand, entered the building, and behind them came a tiny, little girl of six by the hand. They were what the world would call common people, in so far as wealth and social standing went. The father, who was about thirty-five, wore a fifteen dollar suit, and the mother's dress was a cheap chintz.

The father and son halted at the bright nickel railing around the bell. The man looked with a sort of silent awe at the bell for an instant, then he took off his hat and held it in his hand. He started a quick, sensitive, inquiring look around to see that he was not overheard, and stooping, said, loud enough though to be heard by a gentleman near by: "Take off your hat, Eddie."

"What for, papa?" inquired the lad in surprise.

"Why, this is the old liberty bell I was telling you and Helen about last night, do you mind?"

The young patriot's hat came off and it remained off till he cast a last look backward at the mother, as in case of martial disease, dyspepsia and liver complaint, but its invigorating and regulating qualities invest it with a health-giving potency made manifest throughout the system. Fairly and actively of the circulation are insured by it, and it effectually counteracts tendencies to kidney disease, rheumatism, neuralgia and gout.

"Oh, my Lord, it's awful to hear some of the questions people ask, and the remarks they drop when they see the bell," continued the reserve officer, with a groan, "Deceit, guile, and peering, intelligent-looking people most of them, too. But the worst are the people who know it all, or think they know it all. They are mostly youngsters."

"The other day an old lady came up to the bell, and she was a complete young girl with her about seventeen or eighteen years of age. This old lady was deeply impressed, and, turning to the girls, said: 'There, my dears, is the bell that rang for the declaration of independence when my grandfather, and your grandfather, was fighting in the revolutionary war.'

"Why, no it isn't, grandmother," said one of the youngsters; "that's the bell that used to hang in the steeple of the church that George Washington attended."

"It isn't anything of the kind," spoke up the other girl; "that's the bell that hung on the state house in Philadelphia. When the British entered the city the bell was taken down and was hidden in the Delaware river for forty years. It was taken up and checked, they were telling it for George Washington's death."

"That's only a sample of some American ignorance," continued the officer. "Most of the people associate the bell in some way with the declaration of independence, but I'm blessed if there isn't hundreds of Yahoos who come here who never seem to have heard of the declaration."

"How about European visitors?"

"Oh, there's thousands of them, but they seem to get the right idea. They are awfully stupid when it comes to connecting the bell with our breaking away from Great Britain. They know that it is a wonderful relic and take everything else for granted."

So far as the venerable relic is concerned, there is a lack of description about it, which would go far with a certain class of foreigners, and a good many Americans too, in assisting them to understand its presence here. Three little placards in English, French and German, hanging in the Pennsylvania building, and setting forth in about one hundred words the history of its memorable ringing July 4, 1775, seem almost a necessity.

Then there has been a great volume of epic poetry on the subject of the bell and its use, some of the most glorious that will live, despite the historical errors embodied in the verses, others that are worthless in every sense. The best might be secured and the bare walls of the corridors lined with these tributes of the poets neatly framed.
