Question Answered.
Yes, August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers and grandmothers never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Biliousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. You can get this reliable remedy at Lafayette Drug Co. Get Green's Special Almanac.

Examination of Teachers.
Baton Rouge, July 15, 1902.
TO PARISH SUPERINTENDENTS:
The next examination of applicants for certificates to teach in the several parishes will take place on the 20th and 21st of August, 1902.

Please send me, at least approximately, the number of questions you will want of each grade that I may know how many papers of each grade to have printed. Public announcement should be made of the examinations, in the official organ of the parish, and all persons intending to apply should be instructed to notify you at once so as to enable you to know how many question papers to order. In addition to questions upon the ordinary branches as heretofore given there will be a few on teaching methods, as also some general questions about the constitution of the United States, and the constitution of the State of Louisiana. It will be well to publish this information that no one may be taken by surprise.

The Artist and the Artisan.
Times Democrat.

It is interesting news that comes from Pittsburg. Chas. M. Schwab, the president of the billion dollar steel trust, is reported to be "a physical wreck." At the age of thirty-eight he is advised by physicians "to retire indefinitely from a business career, to go to Europe and to seek rest and peace and strength." An instructive commentary this on the life of the modern "captains of industry!" The lesson taught by this man's career may be comprehended by the dullest mind. He was born in 1864 at Lorretto, Pa.; was educated at the public schools at Lorretto, and at the age of fifteen drove a mail wagon between that place and Cresson. While engaged in this work, he became acquainted with one Andrew Carnegie. At the age of sixteen years, Schwab worked in a grocery store at Braddock, Pa. The same year he obtained a position in the Carnegie works as stake-driver in an engineering corps. His wages at that time were $30 a month. At twenty-three years of age he became chief engineer and was sent to build the Homestead steel plant. He managed the Homestead plant for two years. At twenty-seven he was sent to manage the Edgar Thompson steel works, and held that position till he was twenty-nine years of age. He was married at twenty-one and had a home of his own. He rigged up a laboratory and studied chemistry and metallurgy. He learned every detail in the manufacture of steel. He received no technical education, studying altogether by himself. At the age of thirty-two he became a partner in the Carnegie company and was elected president. At the age of thirty-eight he became president of the billion dollar steel trust at a salary of $1,000,000 a year. A few days ago he "made" $18,500,000. He bought the Bethlehem steel works for $7,500,000 and sold the same property to the shipbuilding trust for $26,000,000 in its securities. "This is the way," says the Philadelphia Press in commenting on the transaction, "people once 'made' money in the tulip mania in Holland. Every one concerned 'made' a lot of money until some foolish man tried to realize. Even Mr. Schwab cannot eat the shares and bonds of the shipbuilding trust. They will not do for wall paper. This money can be 'made' only by selling these securities to the public. Will the public buy? It has seen Asphalt smash, it has watched Rubber go down, and it sees even the great steel trust hanging at prices which are ridiculous if people really believed that full years in iron and steel can last. If the public does not buy this money will not be 'made.' It will go where went the money 'made' in tulips, in South Sea securities, in mines and the New York realty craze, and the Western realty booms about Indianapolis and other Western cities in 1873, in California lands in 1883, and in a great array of Southern land sites and mines in 1893." And now at the age of thirty-eight, this man who has "made" his millions yet lost his health is compelled to retire indefinitely from a business career. "While the poor man is going about the country trying to find something to put into his stomach," said Mr. Bryan a few days ago, "these rich men are going about the country trying to find a stomach to put something into." How perfectly might this epigram be applied to Charles M. Schwab!

In contemplating such a life the irrepressible interrogative "Cui Bono?" instinctively escapes the lips. What is the use of such a life—of such a mode in living? Truly, is it not "the pace that kills?" Are these captains of industry never to understand that the making of a living is relatively insignificant in life and that the knowing how to live is the thing supreme?

To illustrate: In 1795 there was born in London a child that was destined to live a life of comparative obscurity, to do work that was stamped with the imprint of immortality and to die before he had finished his twenty-sixth year. This boy was the son of a livery-stable keeper; went to school at Enfield, served for five years an apprenticeship to a surgeon, studied later in London and practiced his profession during his twenty-first and twenty-second years. He became a friend, not of the Andrew Carnegies of his day, but of certain persons known in a severely limited circle, as Leigh Hunt and Charles Lamb. As the mood moved him he wrote verses, and later contrived to have them published. Among these verses were pieces entitled "Endymion," "Hyperion," "Lamia," and "Ode to a Grecian Urn." He wrote not a great deal, but in all that he wrote was illustrated an exquisite sense of beauty that won for him undying fame. Like the "Still unravished bride of quietness," the "foster-child of silence and slow time,"—this poor artist shall live long after the richest artisans of the world have passed both from sight and from memory:

"When old age shall this generation waste
Thou shalt remain, in midst of other woe
Than ours, a friend to man, to whom thou say'st,
'Beauty is truth—truth beauty—that is all
Ye know on earth, and all ye need to know.'"

Poor philosophy this for the Schwabs and the Carnegies of the land—for artisans of high or low degree; but for souls responsive to the appeals of love and of religion as well as of power these lines of Keats are pregnant with influence to bless and to save. The rich men of Athens, looking out upon the building Parthenon, rubbed their hands curiously and bethought them:

"I wonder what that fellow Praxiteles imagines he's trying to do?" and straightway went back to their money-changing. Every one now knows who designed and who built the Parthenon. Does any one remember the names of the Athenian money makers?—the Athenian "captains of industry," if you will? What after all doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his health, not to speak of losing his soul?

"Twas Impossible." "Colonel, do you believe in dreams, apparitions, or anything of that sort?" "No," he says, with emphasis, toying with the mint julep. "I do not, suh. Once I had the delirium tremens, suh, most infernally bad, suh, add I saw snakes." "Well?" "Scrutinizing those reptiles closely, suh, I saw that they were watuh snakes. Watuh snakes! It was, of co'se, impossible!"—Baltimore Herald.
