Major D. Price Porter, of Jackson, Miss., who had the yellow fever for a week, died on Saturday evening last. It is strange that he would be the only one in that city to take the disease and that there has been no other cases. The outlook is good that the city will escape with but this one case.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat went in from the start to oppose the true Democratic party, both in the City of New Orleans and the State. It shows who is behind that paper, and it does not care a continental, so that its owner can be boosted to the U. S. Senate, who is none other than Republican Denegre.

The ticket nominated by the regular and straight out Democratic party in New Orleans is not to be changed simply because it does not suit a few soreheads. This is right. The gentlemen composing the ticket were nominated by a regular constituted Democratic convention and they should be loyally supported by every true Democrat.

The latest figures in regard to the census of South Africa gives the population of that country as follows: "In Cape Colony the population is 376,812 white and 1,148,926 colored; in Natal, 44,415 white and 453,288 colored; in Rhodesia, 13,000 white and 600,000 colored; in Bechuanaland, 5255 white and 7471 colored; in Basutoland, 578 white and 218,326 colored; in the Transvaal, 300,000 white and 649,580 colored; in Swaziland, no white and 60,000 colored, and in the Orange State 77,716 white and 129,787 colored."

The Oceanic, the largest steamer in the world, arrived at New York from Liverpool one day last week on her first trip. She had 380 saloon and 260 second passengers. The Oceanic has a tonnage of 17,000—3,000 more than any vessel afloat. A steamer on the western rivers of 1,000 tonnage is regarded as a large boat. Her speed is 22 knots an hour, and it is said she can cross the Atlantic in four days. If a passenger walks three times around the vessel, he will have traveled a mile. The promenade is a fifth of a mile in length. She has fifteen boilers of 1,100 tons weight; triple engines, with four cylinders each, developing 28,000 horse power. She can steam 24,000 miles, almost around the world, in eighty-one days, without re-coaling. She will have a crew of 500 men, and will carry 1,500 passengers.

MR. DENEGRE'S THE ALL-POWERFUL HAND.

The following editorial from the Daily States, the only straight-out Democratic paper in the City of New Orleans that has not been on the "force," shows up Denegre and his Jacksonian movement in its true light:

Like the cuttle-fish, which lashes the water in which it swims until the inky depths are turned upon the surface and hide its presence, the Jacksonian leaders are thundering and railing at the rottenness of the regular ticket in the hope that their own real aim in the present local political contest may be concealed from public eye. Let us not, therefore, lose sight of the genesis of this Jacksonian movement, lest we are fooled into the idea that it is the inspiration solely of a sincere desire for honest municipal government, and not a wild scramble for office. Let us bear in mind that behind all this clamor for a good ticket lie not alone an assault upon the present Democratic State administration, but also the welfare of the carefully nurtured ambitions of Mr. Walter D. Denegre to warm a seat in the United States Senate.

The Jacksonian movement now attempting in this city to capture our municipal government is the same in name and identity as the Jackson movement born in Bayville on July 3. The same men are behind both. The same source of wealth are providing the sinews of war for both. Both, if successful, mean the loss of Democratic prestige in Louisiana. Both if not confounded in defeat, mean the promotion of the political aspirations of Mr. Denegre, who may possess all the eminent qualities of availability and leadership which his admirers claim so fondly for him, but who, we submit, is not, in the most liberal construction of the term, a true representative of the Democratic party of Louisiana.

We do not believe that Mr. Denegre when he launched the Bayville fiasco entertained the most remote idea that a campaign against the regular party in the New Orleans municipal contest held out any prospect of ultimate success. But we do believe that Mr. Denegre and his friends, carried away by the belief that there existed antagonisms to Gov. Foster and his administration which needed only wise leadership to whip them into an invincible and composite whole, did feel that the Bayville meeting would rally the State under their spottless banner of political reform and lead to a revolution predestined to success. The Bayville movement, however, has fallen lamentably flat. The Democratic party has resented it to a man. It has found support in no single quarter of the State, and there is no record in our politics of a movement so quickly and so utterly repudiated by the people to whom it appealed. It won no recruits, accomplished no purpose and was noteworthy only because it showed the strength of the administration in the sober thought of the State.

Realizing then that their carefully conceived plans stood in a fair way to complete annihilation and the only hope of rehabilitation lay in a successful municipal contest in New Orleans, Mr. Denegre and his friends bit upon the happy idea of launching a sanely crusade for the control of the city government, under the thinly disguised plea that the regular party was hatching a deep-laid conspiracy to steal the City Hall and carry off with it as plunder the $14,000,000 which the people had voted for drainage and sewerage. Even that campaign enlisted no enthusiasm. Public interest was torpid and refused to believe that the local Democratic party was a band exclusively composed of petty thieves and public plunderers. And it goes without saying that if the Grand Opera House convention had avoided some of the smaller blunders which, out of excess of confidence, it committed, the Jacksonian movement would be to-day what it was a fortnight ago—a helpless and inconsequential minority of disgruntled office-seekers and ambitious politicians. Unfortunately, however, the Grand Opera House convention, in some minor particulars, laid itself open to attack, and thus it gave to the Jacks the scent material upon which they have since been building high hopes of victory.

The temporary inflation of Jacksonian hopes promises an early collapse, however. The sudden rush of accessions to the Canal street headquarters has ceased. Sober second thought is revising opinions hastily formed when the Democratic ticket was announced. The ungracious lies against Mr. Capdevielle, now melting away as the sun of truth is shed upon them, are reacting upon those who, if they did not launch them, gave at least tacit acquiescence in their circulation. The Democratic ticket, under the light of closer inspection, has proved, if not a perfect, at least a ticket of more than average quality, and strong enough to bear favorable comparison with any which the opposition may present. In the two months' campaign now upon us, the ticket will grow steadily in favor, nominated as it was in open convention of the plain people. On November 7, we have no doubt it will win.

Yet this recent impetus to the Jacksonian movement will, we trust, have a beneficial effect in one direction. If it shall make plain to the people of this city that behind the present Jacksonian movement stands the Jacksonian movement set on foot at Bayville, with the same hands guided this as guided that, and that beneath the sham cry for good government lie the subtle machinations and overweening ambitions of selfish men, willing to wreck the Democratic party if by so doing they can attain their own political ends; if, in short, the lusty shouting of the Jacks reveals to general public understanding the real motives that move them in this campaign, the temporary fright that Democracy has suffered will not be without its compensating advantages. The clever gentlemen who are managing the present campaign for the Jacks are seeking to keep Mr. Denegre in the background, in the hope of avoiding the damage his actual presence might do; but if Mr. Denegre is not here in the flesh, he is here by wire, and his is the brain that is fighting the fight and his the interests that must be subserved. Mr. Denegre in the flesh may be enjoying the delights and the luxuries which wealth affords in beautiful Manchester-by-the-Sea; but his spirit is with us, and if his movement triumphs, not all the King's horses and not all the King's men can stay his impetuous return to Louisiana; and when he thus returns those who are not blind to the possibilities of the situation must know his coming means for his own ends the inauguration of a bitter factional struggle against the best interests of the State Democracy and the material welfare of our people.

The Bank, its Purpose and its Advantages.

In order that the bank just opened may be of advantage to a more extended scope of country, we propose to show it is within the reach of all to be of practical assistance to the bank, and at the same time benefit themselves—the question then comes up, how is it possible for me to keep a bank account and benefit both the bank and myself? You say you have been in business several years—have never kept a bank account, and can do without a banker. Of course you can—we will point out some of the advantages, however. In the first place your money will be lodged in a place of security. You have $100 or $500 that you keep in your house or safe at your store or office, or carry about your person. You may lose this money from your pocket. Your house or office may be entered by thieves, or fire may consume your house, and money too—even if by good luck you escape loss, is not the anxiety of something? You can avoid all this by keeping a bank account. Another advantage is to save time. You deposit in large sums and draw checks against that deposit in small sums. Is not this better than to spend time counting out money, and making change, which, perhaps, you have to send out for, and be liable to make losses by errors?

Before this bank commenced operations, money was transmitted by mail, or steamer, at great risk of actual loss or long delay. Now the style of handling money has changed, and by means of drafts, amounts—no matter how large or small—can be transmitted by mailing without any risk whatever to the sender, if directed and endorsed properly. This keeps the currency at home and in circulation where it is most needed. Your banker will also make collections for you, and when you make notes you can make them payable at your banker's, thus always locating your indebtedness, and it looks better to have notes payable in bank—your receipts and payments are always kept trace of, and there is no better voucher than a bank check, properly endorsed. Your receipted bill might be mislaid, but your bank account can always be referred to.

It is reported that the cotton crop is so short in Morehouse parish that they will finish up cotton picking by the first of October.

Shreveport, the hustling city west of us, with its many railroads, has now a population of 22,000, according to the last census taken, which we learn was last week. Out of the 22,000 population, 10,000 are blacks.

The Democratic primaries take place in Concordia parish on Monday next to nominate parish officers. At the same time delegates will be selected to the Senatorial and Judicial convention to be held in St. Joseph to nominate a Senator, Judge and District Attorney.
