A DREAM COME TRUE?

Dr. Ehrlich's New Specific for Blood Disease Seams Almost Miraculous.

(From Arthur B. Reeve's "Triumphs of Medicine," in Metropolitan.)

Many medical victories have been stumbled upon by accident. But there was no chance or accident about this discovery for the cure of blood disease. It is the result of careful, patient research of years. That is perhaps the most wonderful part of it. In fact, only one other drug bears any similarity to this, and that is quinine as a specific for malaria. Quinine was discovered by accident. This new remedy is a specific for blood disease, worked out scientifically after a laborious progress through 605 previous attempts. That is why Dr. Ehrlich calls his new drug "No. 606." It is a fortunate thing one can refer to it in this convenient way, for the scientific name is formidable—dioxidiamidoarsenobenzol.

The treatment is simple and results are almost instantaneous. A little golden yellow powder, carried carefully in a vacuum tube, is dissolved into a liquid. This part of the process is extremely important, and should be performed only by one who has had experience. The liquid is then injected into the muscles or veins hypodermically—preferably half into the muscles and half into the veins. A little soreness and headache result; nothing more serious. The patient, we will say, goes to bed that night as usual. In the morning he awakes. He wonders what has happened. "I feel well!" he exclaims. "I feel the way I used to twenty years ago." Can it be a mocking dream? He rubs his eyes. No, it is not a dream—it is a reality.

Over 4,000 cases have been treated in the last three months. They show a record of 92 per cent cured with one injection. Over 200 doctors have treated them. Rarely was a second injection necessary. All but the most desperate cases were cured at once; all were benefited. And it is not like the ill-fated announcement of Dr. Koch's tuberculin. Tuberculin was given to nearly everybody who asked for it; it was sold for money to incompetents and raised false hopes, only to dash them pitilessly to earth. Ehrlich has seen to that aspect of it. Only reliable doctors have been permitted to handle the drug till the experimental stage was well passed. Their experience was identical in Austria, in Germany, in Russia, in America.
