

LEVI PARSONS MORTON.
Levi Morton's opportunities were not greater than those of most country boys. He was reared on a New England farm, under conditions demanding religious reverence, paternal respect, strict morality and habits of industry. His strongest characteristic was a disposition to trade, rather than to read—a harbinger of that keen insight for which he was famous in later years in the world of business. A country boy, merchant, banker, diplomat, vice president—the rise of Levi P. Morton is characteristically an American possibility.

At the age of fifteen he displayed dash, vigor and enterprise and keen perception concerning matters connected with business. The dominating note of his career was fitness—he was prepared—always ready—seeing opportunities with an accuracy that was considered marvelous. His vision reached beyond the limitations of country merchandising. The assurance of his own qualifications impelled him to seek larger fields in which to exercise the peculiar faculties with which he was gifted.

His extraordinary capacity for winning the confidence of men was responsible in a large measure for an unbroken chain of commercial and financial successes in Boston, New York and London. Mr. Morton typified the dominant spirit in American business life—Progress.

Why grin and bear all these ills when Sloan's Liniment kills pain?

"I have used your Liniment and can say it is fine. I have used it for sore throat, strained shoulder, and it acted like a charm."—Allen Dunn, Route 1, Box 88, Pine Valley, Miss.

"I am a painter and paperhanger by trade, consequently up and down ladders. About two years ago my left knee became lame and sore. It pained me at nights at times till I could not rest, and I was contemplating giving up my trade on account of it when I chanced to think of Sloan's Liniment. I had never tried it before, and I am glad to state that less than one 25c. bottle fixed me up apparently as good as ever."—Charles C. Campbell, Florence, Texas.

Obituary.

Emile Pefferkorn, an old and popular conductor on the Alexandria branch died last Saturday night at his home in Lafayette at the age of 68 years.

The above notice of death which we have taken from the Abbeville Meridional, will be read with genuine regret by the numerous friends of the deceased in this community wherein he was born and reared.

Emile Pefferkorn was a good man and first class citizen. He was the son of Jacob Pefferkorn and Esther Miller and was born and reared in Opelousas. He began life as a shoemaker, then went into the bar room business, in which occupation he made lots of money.

He built the home wherein Cliff Allen resided just north of the Pefferkorn home on Union Street, now occupied by Mrs. Sam Perkins.

Moving to Lafayette some twenty years ago, he became a railroad man and was for many years a conductor from Lafayette to Alexandria. Sometime since he lost his job and this preyed upon his mind to such an extent he died of grief.

A relative of his stated to the writer about two months since, he was dying of grief at the loss of employment.

He had to pass an examination under new rules of the company, and being unlettered, could not stand the test.

He had been an ideal employee. Always on the job, without accident to his train, but being unable to pass the examination, was relegated to private life. This was more than he could endure, and he passed away grief stricken over his inability to find other employment.

He leaves a widow, formerly Miss Hollier of this city, a number of sons and daughters to mourn his loss. J. A. Perkins and Robert Perkins are his nephews. Mrs. Sam Perkins his sister and Jake Vatter his first cousin.

Goodbye "Peff." May the sod rest lightly upon your manly bosom, and over your honest heart, may violets spring.

Farm News

"IF WE BUY FROM YOUR SHELVES, YOU BUY FROM OUR FARMS."

We have a letter from a Southern farmer before us which sheds a strong light on the situation. "I hauled a load of hay to my home town," the writer tells us, "but the merchants wouldn't even make me a price on it. They said, we don't want your wagon of hay, because we buy our hay in carload lots from the west. And yet they say we do wrong when we send money north and west to buy bargains from mail order houses. We are simply feeding them out of their spoon."

Now we hope any merchant who reads this article will not throw the paper down and say the farmer was wrong. It's a case where merchant and farmer should come together and reason together. It seems to us a reasonable demand which farmers make of merchants when they say, "If we buy from your shelves, you buy from our farms. If we buy of Southern merchants, you buy of Southern farmers."

Here, it seems to us, is a great chance for co-operation for the mutual benefit of farmer and merchant. It will certainly help the merchant to keep in the community the money which he has been sending north and west for meat, corn, oats, flour, hay, lard, etc. His patrons will become richer and give him larger trade.

And we repeat that it is the duty of the merchant to encourage this result. As we have said before, the merchant in the rural south has performed only half his function when he has arranged for farmers to pay him a profit on what he has to sell. It is also his duty to find a market for what they have to sell, and he cannot demand that they serve him unless he also serves them. And he ought to serve them not merely in taking their cotton, a service in which he usually takes little trouble and makes a fair profit—but it will pay him to serve them by finding markets for farm products in cases where it means that he must do intelligent and active hustling to effect results.—The Progressive Farmer.

Studebakers last a lifetime

A Studebaker wagon bought in 1868 — and working today

THREE generations of farmers have been well and faithfully served by a Studebaker Farm Wagon bought in 1868 by Mitcheal Everman of Centerville, la. The grandson of the man who bought this Studebaker wagon writes: "There is not a crack in the hubs and I am using it every day." Let us prove to you that this is not an exceptional Studebaker wagon. Studebaker has thousands of letters telling about Studebaker wagons that have served their owners just as faithfully as the Everman wagon.

A visit to our store will convince you that the Studebaker Farm Wagons and Buggies we always have in stock are just as reliable—just as well built—as the Studebaker Vehicles of half a century ago. Come and see us when you need a wagon or harness.
