"Next Stop, the Azores"

Ponta Delgada, With NC-4 in Harbor.

ARMEN are preparing to make the Azores islands the aerial junction of the future. They predict that this garden spot of the Atlantic, with its mild climate and other health giving qualities, will become the stopover for all overseas travel by airplane and dirigible. They point out that the exploit of the United States navy in effecting a crossing has virtually put the islands on the map, as far as the general public is concerned; that for many years problems of construction will limit the overseas route to the Azores, where fuel and other supplies may be replenished, says the New York Tribune.

Rising to a height of more than 7,000 feet—as in the case of Pico—and at the lowest 350 feet above sea level, as the island of Corvo, the islands form an oasis in a desert of water and mist and heavy banks of clouds—clouds that rise off the water in the morning and blot out everything from view, narrowing the horizon to a few feet for the anxious aerial pilot and his navigator.

Already navigators are at work on instruments to eliminate these difficulties. They count on the Azores with all its mists and clouds to furnish them with correct weather reports, radio stations and rescue ships in case of accident to the planes.

Pleasant Place for Stopover. And a stopover at the Azores will not be in the nature of a hardship to overseas passengers. What would a tourist find, for example, if his plane dropped him at Ponta Delgada, the capital of St. Michael's? On approaching the islands he would find a great cloud of dense, gray mist resting on the horizon. Nearer it becomes a reddish brown dotted with moldy green.

Weather is Always Mild. Some of the finest homes in the world have been built there by wealthy and often titled continental, principally Portuguese. In the farming districts (and there are large farms among the various islands) many of the natives wear costumes entirely red—short jackets, vests and knee breeches, with gaiters buttoned over the feet, which are often bare. When anything at all is worn on the soles it usually consists of leather sandals.

These people are of retiring disposition, rarely visiting the communities for fear that some one will laugh at them and their dress. In the towns, however, German, English, Portuguese and American commercial visitors have introduced modern modes of dress and influenced social and business life. The natives do not overwork, unless in caring for the many travelers who come over the sea in search of the health they always find, either climbing the volcanic slopes or bathing in the warm baths of Furnas.

As for scenery, there will one find pine and elm trees growing in the same neighborhood with oranges, bananas, citrons and pomegranates? Long known only as the little islands where there are no snakes, the Azores are believed to have a destiny as replete with adventure as they are full of volcanic crevices and craters, all extinct, but alive with possibilities.

Gov. Hall Is For Stubbs; Why He Is Not For Parker

Former Governor L. E. Hall, as has been known for some time is supporting Frank P. Stubbs for governor. He will enter the campaign and will deliver his first address at Lake Charles on the night of November 22, speaking from the same platform with Col. Stubbs and Judge George K. Favrot.

"I know those who can be depended upon to stand steadfast," said Judge Hall in a brief statement Friday. "I am not deceived by noise and chatter." Numerous requests have come to him in the last few days asking him to speak. The people throughout the state know that Judge Hall, perhaps of all men, is in a position to judge John M. Priker on his true merits.

When asked for an expression as to why he was supporting Stubbs, Judge Hall made the following statement: "There is no man in public life who knows the state better than I or who has a more intimate knowledge of the people and of their interests and needs.

"There is no man who has a greater love for it and a deeper devotion to its welfare, or who would do more for its good. I think I have shown that."

"I stand today where I stood eight years ago and where I stood during the four years at Baton Rouge. I have no grudges to satisfy and no bitterness to poison my life or warp my judgment.

"I know the public men of the state, for I have been taught in the harsh school of experience to know men."

"I know those who can be depended upon to stand steadfast and those who cannot. I am not deceived by noise and chatter."

"I know Mr. John M. Parker and I know Frank Stubbs. Frank and I were born in adjoining parishes, he in Ouachita and I in Morehouse, where we grew up to manhood together. I was a judge and he a lawyer and he practiced before the courts where I sat."

"In all our past lives, I have known no ill of him. He has always been dependable, steadfast and true, a plain unassuming fellow without any of that accursed vanity that sours the milk of human kindness and makes a man unfit to hold the reins of public authority."

This expression from Judge Hall will require no interpretation for those who know the politics of the state and have followed this campaign.

Parker Tempted Hall Judge Hall has probably had a more intimate relationship with John M. Parker than any man in the state. It was Mr. Parker who went to Monroe in 1911, and induced Judge Hall to quit the supreme bench, to which he had been elected for twelve years, and to make the race for governor "on a ring-busting expedition," identical with the one Mr. Parker is waging throughout the state now.

They campaigned the state. Henri L. Gueydan of Vermilion was Judge Hall's running mate for lieutenant governor. The speeches of Mr. Parker in that campaign, eight years back, were almost identical with those he is delivering now. They won. Judge Hall received a plurality vote in the state primary. Dr. James B. Aswell dropped out and John T. Michel declined to enter a second primary.

Deserted to Roosevelt Governor Hall was inaugurated and assumed the reins of government, determined to carry out the pledges of his campaign platform. But, when Mr. Parker was needed most, he failed to stand hitched. Roosevelt beckoned and Mr. Parker deserted Hall and the Democratic party.

Judge Hall made no reference to this well known page of political history, but it is familiar to everyone.
