CHOOSING BEST BREED OF HOGS

Whichever One the Farmer Decides Upon He Should Develop to Highest Standard.

LARD TYPE MOST POPULAR

At Present Time Animals Weighing From 175 to 250 Pounds Command Highest Prices—Bacon Hog is Not Raised Extensively.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.) There is no best breed of swine. Some breeds are superior to others in certain respects and one breed may be better adapted than another to certain local conditions.

The essential point is that after the farmer has once decided upon the kind of hog to raise he should stick to this decision and develop the chosen breed to its highest possible standard. It is not feasible for one individual to raise several different breeds and bring them to perfection. In making his choice, too, the farmer should be guided by the kind of breeds already established in his locality. If he selects one of these he is not likely to make a mistake.

Two Types of Swine. There are two distinct types of swine, namely, the lard and the bacon types. Swine of the lard type far outnumber those of the bacon type in the United States. The lard type is preferred by the people of this country, consequently the majority of feeders produce a rapid-fattening, heavy fleshed lard type. The bacon type is not raised extensively in the United States.

States. The production of choice bacon is more general in those sections where the feed of the hog is more varied and where corn is not relied upon as the principal grain for hogs. The principal breeds of the lard type are the Poland China, Berkshire, Chester White, Duroc-Jersey and Hampshire. The lard type of hog is low set and compact, with a very wide and deep body. The shoulders should be full although not coarse, with full hind quarters and hams carried out straight to the tail and thickly fleshed down to the hock. The flesh should be thick and evenly distributed throughout the body.

The size and weight are largely determined by market conditions. At present pigs weighing from 175 to 250 pounds ordinarily command the highest prices.

Best Bacon Types. The principal breeds of the bacon type are the Tamworth and large Yorkshire, both of British origin. The bacon type is very different from the lard type, being longer in leg and body, with less width of back and lighter in the shoulders and neck. The first impression that this type conveys is one of leanness and lankiness. Much emphasis is laid on the development of side, because it is the side of the hog that is used for the production of bacon. On the other hand, large, heavy hams are not desirable on a bacon hog.

SHIP EGGS BY PARCEL POST

Weight of Single Dozen of Eggs Will Run From 2 to 3 Pounds, Depending on Packing.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.) Average hens' eggs will weigh about 1 1/2 pounds to the dozen, or 2 ounces apiece. The weight of a single dozen of eggs in a carton properly packed and wrapped for mailing will run from 2 to 3 pounds, depending on the nature of the particular container, the size of the eggs, and the packing and wrapping used. If the container be a very light one and the eggs small, the parcel may fall within the 2-pound limit, and the postage, therefore, within the first and second zones, or 150-mile limit, would be 6 cents. Most parcels containing a dozen eggs will exceed 2 pounds but will not reach 3; therefore the postage on them will be 7 cents within the first and second zones. A parcel containing 2 dozen eggs will add perhaps 2 cents to the postage, though sometimes only 1 cent, depending on the nature of the container and the packing and wrapping.
