Gas Producer Given A Try-Out Here

The first time in local waters the Galusha Gas Producer was in service by the Louisiana Fish and Oyster Company this morning. The producer has just been placed on the oyster dredge at St. Charles, a ninety-five foot boat with a sixty-five horsepower gasoline engine. The apparent effort the engine made by gas produced by the producer propelled the dredge smoothly on an eight mile clip, and a number of passengers whom Mr. Lowrance, manager of the company owning the boat, had for the observation were most favorably impressed with the success of the experiment.

The Gas Producer is not a new invention and its success has been acknowledged in many other parts of the United States and in foreign countries. For more than ten years it has proven its meritorious value as perhaps the greatest fuel saver for gas engines ever invented. It remained for Mr. Lowrance to introduce this great economic device into local usage and the public has him alone to thank for an insight into the practical and saving qualities of the machine. After a thorough test it is Mr. Lowrance's plan to install gas producers in each of their five company boats. Others, no doubt, will follow their example.

The gas producer now a part of the St. Charles is operated by the use of coal instead of gasoline. The cost for gasoline per day on the St. Charles has been about $14.00. The gas producer does the same work for a daily cost of about $3.00. Not only is the saving in operation to be considered but the handling of the fuel for the gas producer is done with less work than the handling of gasoline and the danger from explosions and fire is eliminated as far as the motive fuel is concerned.

Mr. E. Nelson from West Lake, Louisiana, an employee of the Cluny Construction Company installed the Galusha Gas Producer in the St. Charles. Mr. Nelson stated that a fire once started under the gas producer would burn for from fifteen to twenty days steadily without additional fuel with engine at rest and the drafts closed. He stated also that about 665 pounds of pea coal per day is required to operate the gas producer with the engine running constantly and that the amount of coal was the same in weight as the gasoline required for the same operation but that the cost of the coal would amount to less than $3.00 for a ten hour run while the cost of gasoline for the same run will amount to about $14.00. The work of installation done by Mr. Nelson was all accomplished at the Watkins machine shop at Berwick and the Hogan Machine Shop on the Morgan City side. The boat has been remodeled completely in its engine room, deck and pilot house. She looks trim and capable and is one of the strongest boats in the fish and oyster business of Louisiana.

Placing the Galusha Gas Producer aboard the St. Charles by Mr. Lowrance is a project that is closely observed by other consumers of gasoline fuel. His judgment and action here-to-fore has produced satisfactory results for the large business managed by him and his progressive innovation in the gas producer no doubt will increase the esteem in which he is held by his business associates. Not only the Louisiana Fish and Oyster Company will benefit by the success of Mr. Lowrance's latest undertaking but the great number of heavy motive fuel users that are to be found among other business interests in Morgan City territory.
