"THE WHITE SISTER"

"The White Sister", the last play of the late Marion Crawford is the attraction booked at the Evangeline Theatre, for Monday, Oct. 16th.

It is the wonderfully powerful drama of love and duty in which Viola Allen appeared for two seasons with tremendous success. It is the fragrance of Italian convents and the quick startling pulsations of the battlefield, of the pathos of remarkable lives and that inspiring struggles of a woman, who is fighting against herself for the right. Its four acts are full of unexpected complications which heighten the action of the play and precipitate the climax with an avalanche of emotion.

While "The White Sister" is a Roman Catholic play, it cannot offend the creed, as it puts principle above ritual and rings true from the standpoint of priests, the nun and the lover. While sympathizing with a man and a maid because of their separation by a cruel trick of fate, one cannot but see the justice of a power that keeps them apart; cannot but recognize the obligation of a nun to her church as one would a debt of honor in the secular world, even though the transaction failed to be satisfactory. The position of the nun is the idealism of religious faith; that of the lover, the very mental and physical strength against what he considers an injustice. Such is the theme upon which is built this drama, telling the story of a fair young Roman girl bereft of both parents, her wealth seized through a ridiculous turn of the Latin law by her aunt and uncle. Her betrothed killed in Africa, she seeks solace within the convent walls, there to offer her young life to her country as did her soldier-lover. A strange turn of fate brings him back to Rome after having been a prisoner for five years. His younger brother, also a soldier, is wounded and is brought to the hospital where Angelia, now a professed nun, is in charge. The lovers meet and both exchange their tales of misery and misunderstanding. He vows to win her in spite of the church and induces her to visit his apartments to sign a paper seeking to release her from her vows. She remains steadfast and spurns his offer. As at last resort, when he threatens suicide, she signs the petition. This stirs his better nature, and he destroys the petition. She is discovered in his room, and to defend her honor, he shoots himself, living long enough, however, to be reconciled to the Church and dies in peace with God, while Angelia lives on and awaits a reunion with him in God's great "to-morrow."

THE COMING FLOWER SHOW

Let us recall our previous Flower shows and look forward with pleasure to our fall show we are working towards for next month. If there are any prettier flowers than the Crysanthemum I have never seen their equal.

These are generally in full bloom about the second week in November. Their bright faces of various colors seem to say "Winter has not arrived yet and we can stay a little longer." So let us flower dowers join hands and make this flower show a success as before.

Flower Inspiration

I plant, I plant and I'm never through,
But my harvest is enjoyed by many 'tis true.
I never tire of nature and its beauties,
The culture of flowers seems one of my duties.
And what a barren world this would be,
If there was no flowers for us to see
I think that God intended them,
To be one of his messengers to men.
