AMUSEMENTS

EVANGELINE

Tonight at the Evangeline the management will present that winsome actress, Miss Marie Doro in "Common Ground." The story is by Marion Fairfax. It is produced with all the elaborateness of setting characteristic of the Lasky studios. With the management of this popular playhouse offering patrons Paramount pictures for an admission price of ten cents, there is no reason for the house not to play to a capacity business. The Paramount people force those who exhibit their offerings in nearly all the large cities to charge at least twenty-cents, and in a number of cases the price is as much as fifty cents. On Wednesday evening Pearl White will make her regular visit in the gripping serial, The Iron Claw.

NEW THEATRE

Two feature pictures are on the program of the New Theatre this evening. Two pictures far above the average are promised to the patrons by Manager Davis. The Ostrich Tip and The Dancer are the titles of the double reel offerings. In line with the policy of the management to furnish a good comedy when ever possible they have a single reel laugh producer to offer with the above program. Peanuts and Powder is the title of today's comedy.

Tomorrow's program will be featured with an intense drama entitled "Fear."

Manager Davis reports that a large number of suggestions are being received in the name contest which will close on Dec. 22nd.

JUDGE MARTIN NOW IN WASHINGTON

Washington, Dec. 4.—Whit P. Martin, the Progressive member of the House from Louisiana, arrived in town this morning to find that he is the most popular man occupying a seat in the lower chamber of Congress. Republican Leader Mann bolted from a group of his admirers when Judge Martin appeared on the floor and greeted him with a cordiality rarely displayed by the almost phlegmatic leader of the minority.

When Claude Kitchin, the Democratic leader, saw Judge Martin he behaved like the father in the Biblical story of the Prodigal Son. It was almost impossible to interview the representative from the Third Louisiana District, due to continual interruptions by members who would rush up to him and deliver themselves of the most enthusiastic brand of greetings. This contrasts sharply with the rather friendless position of Judge Martin heretofore, excluded as he was from the confidences and councils of the two big parties.

Until the first of the year the duties of representing Louisiana in the Senate will devolve upon Senator Ransdell, as Senator Droussard's physicians decline to permit their patient to return to Washington until that time.

His most intimate friend has not been informed as to such ideas as I have in regard to the organization of the next House." Representative Whit P. Martin of the Third Louisiana District made his statement today when asked as to his intentions in this particular.

Judge Martin declared that political situations are in the habit of changing so rapidly that he doubts if the most far-seeing person would attempt to outline his attitude a year in advance. "There is just one thing that I am very sure," continued Judge Martin, "and that is that I am going to do the thing that will be for the best interest of the Third district."

Sickly children need WHITE'S CREAM VERMIFUGE. It not only destroys worms, if there be any, but it acts as a strengthening tonic in the stomach and bowels. Price 25c per bottle. Sold by Bellanger Drug Co.

The steamer Patricia owned and operated by the Dyer-Lehmann Co. docked at New Orleans Monday with the largest cargo of rice of the season loaded on four barges which the vessel towed from Abbeville to New Orleans. There were 6429 sacks of rough and 8894 sacks of clean rice. The rice was for the Louisiana State Rice Milling Co., at New Orleans. This is about the third trip of the season for the Patricia.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE

By Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes

Novelized from the Motion Picture Play of the same name by George Kleine.

Copyright, 1916, by Adelaide M. Hughes

SYNOPSIS.

Pierpont Stafford, banker and railroad magnate, with his sixteen-year-old daughter, Gloria, is wintering at Palm Beach. Gloria is a vivacious, but willful young lady who chafes under the restraining hand of a governess from whom she repeatedly escapes. Her childish capers cause young Doctor Royce to fall in love with her. She steals from her room at night and in an auto plunges into the surf where she leaves the car.

SECOND EPISODE

Little Miss Stafford wandering in a silk frock through the jungle of the everglades at midnight did not even-know that she was lost. The terrors that were in store for her, she was not imagining. She was still giggling over her imaginations of the excitement at Palm Beach when her governess discovered that she had run away.

Miss Sidney woke as Gloria expected, sprawled as well as Gloria hoped, her feet on high and the rug waving in air. She knew who played the trick and ran into Gloria's room. She saw that the bed was empty, the sleeping suit tossed aside, the dinner gown gone. She flung into her bathrobe and ran to give the alarm to Gloria's father. Her costume made a sensation even among the sensational costumes of Palm Beach. She found Pierpont playing cards with young Dr. Royce.

What she told them sent them running in opposite directions, frightening the dancers and the loiterers about the tables in the gardens and various couples surprised in loving embraces among the inviting nooks.

On the lawn the two men came together and shook their heads in signal of failure. They saw David and Lois. David mentioned the loss of his automobile. Neither he nor Pierpont thought of Gloria as the thief. They continued the search among the crannies of the enormous hotel and among the cottages of their friends.

But Dr. Royce had been speaking of Gloria's rebellious heart only that afternoon. He ran at once to a parking space where automobiles were kept. The chauffeurs were not about and he did not pause to haggle. He threw away a "For Hire" card and, leaping into the saddle, so to speak, of a six cylinder thoroughbred, dug his spurs into its side and plied the lash.

The car broke into such a run that its own chauffeur did not recognize it as it shot into the main road. Royce checked his speed only when he met occasional saunterers along the roads.

She Did Not Like the Manner of the Boy.

From most of these he got no information. From one negro on a bicycle chair he had the comforting answer: "Yassa, I done seen a bar-headed young missy in a auterible lickety split—yassa. She turned sothe at the next corner. If I hadn't a throwed this year wheel over mighty peart I'd a—"

Royce was not interested in the Negro's might-have-been. He was already at the next corner, and he turned south, too.

Now and then a red light ahead showed Royce on, but when he overtook it it was never on the car that carried Gloria.

In one of the villages he found a young girl who had seen a young girl or a comet shoot through. He had chosen decided to turn back and capture the laughter that would greet him. Long ago, no doubt, Gloria had disappeared and been resuscitated.

But even as he slowed up for the turn he caught sight of tire tracks swerving wildly and turning off into the sand between two dunes. He shut off his power and set his brakes, drew into the side of the road, and jumped out.

He passed the barrier of the dunes and caught sight of David's racing car in the waves. The billows flaming with moonlight were sweeping over the little machine with terrifying ruthlessness, now tossing up spray which the moon turned to jewelry, now smothering it all from view.

Royce gazed aghast. He tore his hair at the vision. He could almost see Gloria caught in the wheel and held fast while she drowned, slowly choking.

He was about to dash into the sea and fight it for the body of the little runaway when he saw footprints in the wet sand.

With a cry of relief Dr. Royce followed them across the sand to the highway. But Gloria had not turned north in the road. She had been wooed into the dense, lush foliage.

The doctor regarded it with dread. He could not imagine how tempting it had been to Gloria's truant heart. He was afraid that she might have lost her mind with fear.

He had hardly plunged into the thicket when he lost track of her.

He ran back, hoping that he might find some courier with news.

Instead he met a boy from a pineapple plantation. Royce hailed him and learned that he was going for a doctor. He had heard and seen exactly nothing of Gloria.

He was about to let the boy go when it occurred to him that Gloria's father would be frantic for some word of her whereabouts. He found a prescription pad in his pocket and a bit of pencil and he wrote a note.

Pierpont Stafford, Royal Poinciana: I found Gloria's car in the surf and her footprints leading into the everglades. I am following them, but think you had better organize searching parties to beat the whole district.

STEPHEN ROYCE. He gave this to the boy and a bill from the small roll he found in his pockets. He made the boy promise to go to the nearest telephone and transmit the message to the hotel. Royce returned again to the chase, increasingly applied at the thought of Gloria alone there.

Now and then he found some hint of her, a shred of silk from her Paris frock torn away by a clutching thorn.

Gloria had not been long in finding out that there can be too much liberty as well as too little. No calm wandering in a dream through nightmarish-land could have seen a more fantastic world than that Florida entanglement. She was entranced at first, but at length she had had enough.

She had read of people who walked in circles till they died of exhaustion. She felt ready to die so already. But mainly she was yawning her pretty head off. She beat about the bush and said "Shoo!" to any crocodiles or boa constrictors that might be in hiding. Then she stretched herself out and began a little prayer. She could not keep awake to finish it. In her sleep she dreamed herself back in the beautiful bed she had foolishly left. She dreamed that she was asleep in her own room.

Meanwhile Dr. Royce stumbled and groped through the jungle in search of her, and her father and brother were in conference with the Palm Beach police.

The message that Royce had given to the boy from Colohatchee reached them a little before dawn. It only increased their alarm, but it gave them something to do. They made no further secret of Gloria's disappearance. They called on everybody for help.

Cars went scurrying along the little railroad that pushes a short distance into the forest; boats of every sort glided along the drainage canal; motor boats, canoes, skiffs, dugouts were spinning hither and yon among the thousands of waterways.

David forgot Lois Freeman and the engagement he had to play golf with her that morning. He and his father had anticipated the dawn in the bayous.

Freneau, strolling across the lawn to open the office of the New York brokers he represented, found Lois Freeman and her father reading the morning papers. They spoke of the loss of Gloria and the $5,000 offer for her restoration to her father. Freneau meditated. He could use $5,000 or less to great advantage.

When Lois invited him to play golf he said that he had another engagement. Whatever motive it was that moved Freneau, he resolved to search.
