

CONVERTIBLE BED FOR JURY ROOMS.

In most states the law provides that the members of a jury shall remain in the jury room during the entire period of their deliberations. Since women have been privileged to serve as jurors, mixed juries have become common, and in cases where their retention overnight has been necessary, there has been considerable difficulty in providing accommodation without causing embarrassment between the sexes. The difficulty has now been solved, according to the Popular Mechanics for November, by the adoption of sleeping-car methods. A convertible bed, that may be applied compared with a lower berth of a section of a sleeping car, has a frame of rods around it, on which curtains are hung that can be as on a Pullman. Each section is portable, and in the daytime can be used as a lounge. At night it is placed against the wall, with the curtains drawn.
