

Why doesn't an ice flow flow?

There seems to be no kind of insect powder that is fatal to humbugs.

The forty Immortals have slid back into obscurity, and all is forgiven.

There never before was a time when the world had so many ex-potestates.

The peach crop promises to be big enough for cholera morbus purposes.

Other seeds may be higher this year, but seeds of kindness will cost no more.

What a pity that the average man has no place to store away ice for a dusty day!

A 27-pound lobster has been caught at Atlantic City. It was not accompanied by a chorus girl.

It was with difficulty that Lake Michigan was kept from freezing from shore to shore this winter.

Somebody has said "we are what we eat." We doubt it especially when we eat boiled cabbage and turnips.

Doctors saved the life of a New York man whose neck was broken. But he will still have to live in New York.

China invented fireworks a good many hundred years before it had an independence day to explode them on.

Automatic starters may be all right for automobiles, but they would never do to set a political campaign in motion.

Though a Minnesota man caught a ton of fish with his hands, others have made greater catches with their imaginations.

The couple who get married in a flying machine evidently do not desire elaborate ceremonies—just a plane wedding.

Fashion notes make it easy to forget that ladies' hats will be high and pocketbooks retain their usual shape of flatness.

Golf balls are to be cheaper. But we cannot paraphrase Marie Antoinette and eat golf balls if we can't have bread.

We await anxiously the time when the little ex-Emperor Pu Yi will begin making attempts to come back. They all do it.

A gun made of cement is one of the latest devices for war purposes. It is dangerous to stand either at the muzzle or the breech.

We take off our hat to the pulmotor, which not only draws suicides back from the dark shore, but patches up their lovers' quarrels.

The Massachusetts man who has been on the operating table thirty-five times may be merely trying to establish a reputation as a cut-up.

Don't boast, even if you did have eggs for breakfast. The man to whom you feel so superior may have had butter on his johnnycake.

A New York surgeon says the vermiform appendix fulfills an important function. He is, of course, speaking from the surgeon's standpoint.

Those Manchurian princes do not make any pretenses to the effect that they stepped out of power in order to devote more time to the uplift.

A near scientist tells us that whenever a man tells a lie his big toe wiggles. There must be some enthusiastic wiggling on the bathing beaches in summer.

The death of Lord Lister, who discovered antiseptic surgery and has saved the lives of thousands, recalls the fact that he was not placed in the list of the twenty greatest.

A Connecticut bank has gone to the wall because its books had not been balanced for forty years. It seems, therefore, that the balancing of bank books is important, after all.

A prominent dentist informs us that false teeth are more sanitary than real ones, but the man who knocks out his fellow man's teeth is not necessarily looked upon as a philanthropist.

A New Jersey woman is suing for damages because after a surgical operation a pair of forceps was sewed up inside her. She is lucky not to have the price of the instrument charged against its loss in her bill.

The Palace of Peace at The Hague will be completed in July of next year. The work is not being hurried.

A Boston highbrow tells us that if he had created the world he would have made every woman beautiful. And what would the beauty doctor do then, poor thing?

Now a society for promoting efficiency has been launched. One of the ways of doing it would be to waste less time on forming fool organizations.

NO MAN'S LAND A ROMANCE

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE
ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS
COPYRIGHT, 1910 BY LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

SYNOPSIS.

Garrett Coast, a young man of New York City, meets Douglas Blackstock, who invites him to a card party. He accepts, although he dislikes Blackstock, the reason being that both are in love with Katherine Thaxter. Coast fails to consider her that Blackstock is unworthy of her friendship. At the party Coast meets two named Dundas and Van Tuyl. There is a quarrel and Blackstock shoots Van Tuyl dead. Coast struggles to wrest the weapon from him, thus the police discover them. Coast is arrested for murder. He is convicted, but as he begins his sentence, Dundas names Blackstock as the murderer and kills himself. Coast becomes free but Blackstock has married Katherine Thaxter and fled. Coast purchases a yacht and while sailing sees a man thrown from a distant boat. He rescues the fellow who is named Appleyard. They arrive at a lonely island, known as No Man's Land. Coast starts out to explore the place and comes upon some deserted buildings. He discovers a man dead. Upon going farther and approaching a house he sees Katherine Thaxter, who explains that her husband, under the name of Black, has bought the island. He is blind, a wireless operator and has a station there. Coast informs her that her husband murdered Van Tuyl. Coast sees Blackstock and some Chinamen chase a yacht and while sailing sees a man thrown from a distant boat. He is rescued by Appleyard, who gets him to the Echo in safety, and there he reveals that he is a secret service man and has been watching the crowd on the island, suspecting they are criminals. Coast is anxious to fathom the mysteries of No Man's Land, and is determined to save Katherine. Appleyard believes that Black and his gang make a shield of the wireless station to conduct a smuggling business. Coast penetrates to the lair of Blackstock's gang, and enters the room and passes him a note which tells Coast that neither his life or her own are safe.

CHAPTER XIV.—(Continued.)

His hand remained on Coast's shoulder, obnoxious but imperative. "And then," he continued after a slight pause, "my fingers remember anything they've ever felt. Let me run my hands over a man's face once, and I'll pick him out of a dozen any time afterwards. Like this."

Before Coast could object Blackstock had brought both hands into play upon his face; lightly, softly and gently the ten blunt, hard tips of his stubby fingers moved over Coast's features, tapping, pressing, gliding on.

It was all but insufferable; Coast was conscious that the blood burned in his face like fire, that his heart was pounding—so loud, it seemed, that the other must be aware of it. Revolted, he almost choked at this familiarity of contact which he must needs endure, from the man of all men he had the greatest cause to hate, loathe and despise. He dug his nails into his palms in an effort to enforce submission. Blackstock's face was within two feet of his own; a satiric smile (he fancied) rested upon those crudely modeled, animal features; he realized suddenly that it was the face of a Satyr, simply, naively sensual, as soulless as its lightless eyes. And a vinuous breath offended his nostrils; his own breath he held, clenching his teeth.

"Now I know you." He could think of nothing to say but: "Oh?" It was with difficulty that he succeeded in enunciating that. The hands moved on, down over his shoulders, and felt of his arms.

"Hard!" commented Blackstock. "You've got strength, haven't you? Not as great as mine, though; you'd hardly realize how immensely strong I am. See now!" His hands moved swiftly back to Coast's throat and girdled it with a collar of iron. "Do you realize I could easily squeeze your breath out of your body. I could!"

Coast's face explored the face above him. Its smile was gone. Something ran cold along his spine, and of a sudden he was without emotion, quite calm and collected.

"But you won't, you know," he said easily; "that is, you wouldn't if you knew my right hand in my pocket was pointing a pistol directly at your heart."

Perhaps the fact that he had merely stated the truth was responsible for his coolness. He noted the instinctive movement of the blind eyes, as if they sought to see if it was true; and he thought: Habit is strong.

Raising his left hand, he grasped Blackstock's right by the wrist and removed it with a certain firmness. The other hand released him an instant later, and the man stood back with a short laugh.

in a twinkling, while the hard smile reappeared on the Satyr's features. "Do you really tote a gun, Handy-side?"

"Always," Coast rejoined briefly. "Why—up here—?"

"You never can tell what's going to happen."

"Perhaps you're right," Blackstock conceded the point graciously. "I don't mind, but you really ought not to take a joke so seriously. However, I'm full of sleep and you must be . . . John—hat, cane."

One of the servants brought them instantly. "Good-night, Handyside."

Blackstock hesitated an instant, then got his bearings and found the back door with unerring accuracy. On the stoop he paused long enough to say: "We'll get together after breakfast and talk business;" and the blackness received him.

Mystified, Coast waited, staring at the spot where he had last seen the man, until one of the Chinamen mildly suggested that his room was ready. He followed the fellow stupidly, preoccupied, his mind ranging far in futile speculation as to the riddle of Blackstock's conduct. Long after he was left alone in the room that had been Power's he sat on the edge of the dingy bed, his gaze fixed upon the reflection of the lamp's flame in the window pane—absorbed in the enigma.

Every Nerve on the Qui Vive.

He could not rid himself of the impression that an inarticulate menace lurked beneath Blackstock's apparently unsuspecting reception of him.

Was insanity the explanation? Was the man in reality a homicidal maniac, at whose intellect the lust to slay ate like a cancer? . . . But in such a case, would he have delegated to another the assassination of Power?

Did he or did he not suspect? Did that sudden slip of the mask signify that he had merely allowed himself to appear to be deceived and was but waiting to deliver some telling stroke in retaliation?

How much has Coast to apprehend, what to guard against? To this latter question his every instinct answered in chorus: Everything. He dared leave no stone unturned to safeguard himself—that he might remain able to protect Katherine.

It came to him that it was not unlikely he had been left in that lonely cottage with the three Chinese that they might quietly make away with him while he slept.

With this in mind he took a more detailed inventory of his surroundings; and found them hopelessly exposed.

Unquestionably he would have been safer in the open; but the storm was now at the top of its fury. Sheets of water were sluicing the house as if cast from some gigantic bucket.

out. More than that, if Blackstock had planned an attempt upon his life during the night, Coast might as well know it; for he was armed and unafraid, and he who knows what to fear is doubly armed.

Having wedged a chair beneath the knob of each door, he placed the lamp upon the table, turning it low that its scanty store of oil might last the night, and sat down on the bed, the pillow at his back. Appleyard's pistol ready at his side.

Insensibly as the dead hours lagged marked by no disturbance foreign to the storm, his weariness bore heavily upon him. His thoughts blurred into a chaotic jumble of incoherencies. He nodded, drowsed with chin on breast, roused with a start when some unusually violent squall swooped over the island, drowsed again, and in the end slipped over upon his side and slept the sleep of the exhausted, profound and dreamless.

CHAPTER XV.

Coast awakened with a gasp, jumping to his feet as if to the peremptory summons of a subconscious alarm-clock. Such, in fact, was more or less the case; he who sleeps upon the thought of danger is apt to awaken with that thought predominant.

A moment gone everything had been densely dark, with that narcotic blackness which characterizes the slumbers of the overworked and overwrought. Now in a twinkling he found himself intensely conscious, in the middle of the floor, pistol in hand, every nerve on the qui vive, every muscle tense.

Gradually he realized that his nerves must have tricked him, that the hair-

He went quickly down through the Cold Lairs to the beach. The Echo was gone, but this did not surprise him; it had been Appleyard's purpose to leave anchor and get away as soon as the gale showed signs of slackening. Inside the sheltering split a sturdy little catboat was dancing crazily at its mooring, but it was evidently deserted, and Coast rightly guessed that the vessel belonged to Blackstock, that its tender was the boat which Power had been accused of stealing—principally, no doubt, to allay the suspicions of Katherine; some means of accounting for the man's disappearance had necessarily to be invented. The boat was, of course, nowhere to be seen; doubtless Blackstock had caused it to be carried up and secreted in one of the abandoned dwellings, or in some recess beneath the bluffs to the west and south.

It was in the shelter of the westerly bluff that Coast stripped and took to the water. Here, as all round the island, the beach shelved boldly, the surf breaking close inshore.

Scrubbing his flesh aglow, he dressed quickly, tingling with the exhilaration of his recent contest, every trace of fatigue and drowsiness washed clean away. A sense of life and well-being ran like quicksilver through his veins; he could have sung aloud or whistled but for the sobering thought, never far beneath the surface of his consciousness, of his responsibility. With Katherine to guard and care for, with Blackstock to watch and guard against and circumvent, there could be little room for cheerfulness in his humor.

Instead of returning the way he had come, an impulse moved him to scale the bluff, which at this point presented not too steep an acclivity.

As he continued along the sole, approaching the heel of what has been likened to a crude sketch of a child's shoe, Coast remarked the crumbling stone walls of what had apparently once been a rude summer house and observatory set atop the highest hillock to seaward. But he had drawn quite near to it before he descried a hem of skirt whipping round a corner of a half-fallen wall. He quickened his steps and took her suddenly unawares as she stood, half-sheltered from the breeze and wholly invisible from the body of the island, her back to the weather-beaten and lichened stones, her gaze leveled to seaward in somber reverie.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

One on the Locusts.

"You know," said Silas, as he drove Mr. Commuter to the station, "them there seventeen-year-locusts is curious beasts. Oh, I've watched them, I know their ways. They comes up out of the ground and they makes for the nearest tree, and they climbs up the trunk till they gets to the leaves. Leaves is what they're after!"

"'Tother day I seen a man standin' in the road, a-lookin' up at a telegraph pole and a-laughin' to beat the band."

"'Wot yer laughin' at, friend?" says I.

"See all them dom seventeen-year-old locusts, a-scuttlin' and a-scurryin' up that there pole?" says he.

"Yes," says I, "what of it?"

"I'm just a-thinkin'," he says, a-most doublin' up laughin', "what an April fool it'll be for them when they gets to the top!"

A Thought.

I remember a young wife who had to part with her husband for a time. She did not write a mournful poem; indeed, she was a silent person, and perhaps hardly said a word about it; but she quietly turned to a deep orange color with jaundice. A great many people in this world have but one form of rhetoric for their profoundest experiences, namely, to waste away and die. When a man can read, his thought has slackened its hold.—Holmes.

Very Particular.

"Mayme is a crank on having things harmonize, isn't she?"

"Yes, to such an extent that she won't use rats because she has mouse-colored hair."

Gilbert Had Good Memory

He Never Forgot That at Harrow One of His Lines Was Considered Improper.

This Gilbert story reaches me from an old Harrovian, says a writer in the Manchester Guardian. In 1872 the people of the town got up theatricals to raise funds for a hospital. Doctor Butler, the head master, said he would not allow the school to go unless the pieces were first submitted to him. One was Gilbert's "Palace of Truth."

In it is a passage in which the hero says to the heroine: "Meet me at nine o'clock tonight outside the garden gate." Doctor Butler vetoed this and substituted: "Meet me at three o'clock this afternoon." This seemed to him more decorous. About five years ago Gilbert was invited to the Harrow speeches. In reply to the toast of his health he said: "I am very much interested in visiting Harrow, for as far as I know it is the only place in the world where a line of mine has ever been condemned as improper." Great consternation prevailed—all the greater because no one except the speaker and one other person, who was just leaving Harrow in 1872, knew what he meant. It was not Gilbert's way to forget these things.

Why Willie Was Late.

"Why, Willie, what kept you so late? Did you have to stay after school? I'm afraid you have been naughty."

"No, ma'am, I ain't never naughty. Bobby Jones was licked fer bein' naughty, an' I stayed after school to bear him yell."

Easy Thing to Do.

People who are extravagant on themselves are often wonderfully ingenious in devising plans of economy for others.

City Without Skyscrapers. In Hamburg the nature of the soil is such that no very tall buildings can be erected, and there are few that have as many as ten floors.

TRIED REMEDY FOR THE C...

PE-RU FOR COUGHS AND COLDS

MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT

For Cows' Caked Udders

Mrs. Julia Lester, Columbus, Ga., writes: "I tried your Mustang Liniment on a cow that was suffering from Caked Udders and in a few days she was in good again. It's a good liniment."

25c. 50c. $1 a bottle at Drug & Gen'l.

THE ONE GIRL FOR HIM

The Girl (who has been sick from sore throat)—The doctor says that I must never talk for more than two minutes at a time.

The Man—How delightful Do you will you marry me?

Astonished Husband.

De Wolfe Hopper tells a good story about the domestic unhappiness of another actor. The hero of the play is a man who had married because he loved a woman who had much money, although she was not beautiful. Naturally, after the ceremony and the acquisition of the bride's financial resources, the husband was never very attentive to her.

Another member of the company which the couple were appearing in, however, far more appreciative of the lady's charms, and proceeded to love to her in an ardent but discreet manner. The grand finale came one evening when the actor directed the other man kissing his wife. The fond lover stood petrified with surprise and expected to be shot down next moment.

No such thing happened. The enraged husband only lifted his face toward the ceiling with a gesture of intense surprise, and exclaimed: "Merciful heavens! And he's even here to!"

HARD TO DROP
But Many Drop It

A young Calif. wife talks of coffee:

"It was hard to drop Mocha Java and give Postum a trial, but my nerves were so shattered that I was a nervous wreck and of course means all kinds of ills.

"At first I thought bicycle riding caused it and I gave it up, but my condition remained unchanged. I did want to acknowledge coffee caused my trouble for I was very fond of it."

"About that time a friend came live with us, and I noticed that he had been with us a week he did not drink his coffee any more. I asked him the reason. He replied, 'I did not have a headache since I had been drinking coffee, some months ago last week, when I began again, but your table. I don't see how you can like coffee, anyway, after giving Postum!'

"I said nothing, but at once ordered a package of Postum. That was months ago, and we have drunk coffee since, except on two occasions when we had company, and the next each time was that my husband did not sleep, but lay awake and talk and talked half the night. We were convinced that coffee caused his suffering, so we returned to Postum. I'm convinced that the coffee was an enemy instead of a friend, and he is no more by insomnia.

"I, myself, have gained 8 pounds weight, and my nerves have become quiver. It seems so easy now to give the old coffee that caused our ills and ills and take up Postum."—Given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Read the little book, "The Real Wellville," in pkg. "There's a reason Ever read the above letter? A one appears from time to time. It is genuine, true, and full of interest.