Tired, nervous? Can't get rested? Tortured with boils, humors?

That is not strange. Impurities have been accumulating in your blood during winter and it has become impoverished. This is the experience of most people. Therefore they take Hood's Sarsaparilla to purify their blood in spring.

"My daughter was run down and tired while in school, and I have been giving her Hood's Sarsaparilla, which has purified her blood and built her up, and she is now getting well and strong. I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla myself with excellent results, and whenever we have any little ailment we resort to this medicine. FARM AND GARDEN NOTES.

ITEMS OF INTEREST ON AGRICULTURAL TOPICS.

Keeping Sows to Breeding—Danger from Inbreeding—Rolling Down Grain Stubble—Etc., Etc.

KEEPING SOWS TO BREEDING.

At this season of the year, many sows are daily dropping their litters. It often happens that it is desirable to have these sows drop another litter late in summer or fall. If we wait until the pigs are weaned, the sow will always then come in heat and be ready to breed in four or five days after the pigs are taken from her. But she may also be bred three to five days after the pigs are farrowed. It is not best to let young sows breed so quickly as this, for the double strain of nursing her litter and supply nourishment for her future offspring will be too much. But an old sow may often profitably be bred thus. She will then stand good feeding without getting fat. But in any case, the young pigs should be early taught to eat from a trough, and should be fed liberally, so that they will not draw too heavily on their dam. —Boston Cultivator.

DANGER FROM INBREEDING.

Breeding in and in is all right for two or perhaps three generations. This is necessary to fix the desired characteristics more firmly. But if this inbreeding is continued much longer than two generations, it is likely to result in loss of physical vigor, and also an exaggeration of all the faults of either ancestor. When any change to other blood is made, it should be from animals that themselves possess some of the good qualities of the original cross. No cross that makes a sudden and violent change from the type fixed upon should ever on any account be allowed. It will only produce mongrels, worse than either of the breeds which originated them. It is generally unwise where farmers' hens all run together to have more than one breed of cocks to breed with them. There may be several specimens, but all of one breed, and none of them closely related.

ROLLING DOWN GRAIN STUBBLE.

One of the first things to be done after the snow off the ground is to run the farm roller over the newly seeded ground of the previous year. This will not only press down into the soil stones thrown up by last winter's freezing, but it will compact the oil around the roots of clover, which may have been lifted by the same means. It is one of the best aids to the young clover plant that we know of, and besides smooths the rough surface, so that the clover may be cut much more closely to the ground. After the rolling it is a good plan where clover was seeded last year to follow with a dressing of 100 pounds of fine gypsum per acre. How this helps clover it is not certainly known, though its effects are often so remarkable as to suggest that the gypsum enables the clover to secure nitrogen from the air imprisoned in the soil.—American Cultivator.

GROWING RASPBERRIES.

J. T. Thompson, of New York, writes: "My fields are of sandy loam with a clay subsoil. I find that any land suitable for a good crop of wheat or corn will grow raspberries. The soil is prepared early in spring as possible, plowed, then harrowed, pulverized and fertilized, using fifteen loads of stable manure to the acre. Every other year I put on about half a ton of unleached wood ashes and 600 pounds of ground bone. The amount of fertilizer will be governed by the character of the soil. Set plants four inches deep, spreading the roots and covering them with earth pressed firmly. Then add some more earth, leaving the upper two inches mellow. Start the cultivator without delay, going over the field once a week, but not more than two inches deep. As the bushes become larger, keep out all the weeds in the row. This frequently stirring of the soil will prevent injury from drought. The second year give thorough cultivation as before, and if thought necessary apply fertilizer by sowing it broadcast over the surface. I mulch my vines a few days before picking begins and find that money used in this manner is well spent.

A $60,000 POULTRY ESTABLISHMENT.

The Poultry Journal gives six pages to a description of a $60,000 poultry house devoted to broilers and eggs. The establishment is now turning out broilers at the rate of 200 a day, and the owner expects to market daily 100 dozen eggs, which he has contracts for at 20 cents a dozen the year round.

The full capacity of the broiler department is said to be about 25,000, all of which are hatched in incubators, and reared in specially constructed broiler houses, conveniently arranged so that only four men are required for their care.

Each day's hatches are kept in separate apartments, and marketed at the age of 90 days, at which time they average about one and one-half pounds.

The proprietor, in his interview, is very enthusiastic and regards its success as assured, estimating the net profits at not less than $25,000 a year. A $60,000 investment is a pretty large one, but if such profits can be made from it, I fancy there will be many more millionaires anxious to start a broiler farm.

The questions, though, with those who read of it, will be: Can it be done?

Can an establishment of that proportion be so managed that year in and year out a constant supply of broilers and eggs will always be on hand at a price sufficiently large to produce a good profit?

It seems possible, but the owner will find many things to contend with, especially so since up to the present time he has depended entirely on neighbors for the supply of incubator eggs, these being from breeds of every imaginable variety, many, of course, being infertile.

The poultry world will watch this farm with especial interest, and should the expectations of the owner be realized, that old threadbare cry of "No money in poultry" will be heard no more.

Should it fail, everyone will say, "I told you so."

But really it should not fail. A man with unlimited capital, as this one has, can make a success of almost anything.

Money is always power. In the poultry business it is no exception. The fact of the matter is, there is absolute need of capital in the poultry business, and unless means sufficient for all actual need are at hand, failure is almost inevitable.—W. H. Camborn, in Farm and Home.

HORNS AND COLOR IN CATTLE.

Among other of their observations furnished by leading packers to Secretary Coburn of the Kansas Board of Agriculture and compiled by him in his quarterly report, devoted to Beef Production, are these:

Armour Packing Company.—Hornless cattle are preferred, because there are less bruises on them, and the general result from slaughtering and disposing of them is better. It is difficult to establish any actual difference at price. They have the preference at even figures, which probably means that they are bringing more. As packers, we certainly prefer them.

Swift & Co.—We do not consider hornless cattle worth more than those of the same quality and fatness, with horns, except in rare cases where shippers or exact use occasions at times a momentary difficulty, even to well educated people. The main aim has been to give as much useful information as possible in a limited space. To those who already have a dictionary, this book will commend itself because it is compact, light and convenient; to those who have no dictionary whatever, it will be invaluable. One may be secured by writing to the above concern, mentioning this paper, and enclosing a two-cent stamp.

Cudahy Packing Company.—While the horns on a steer are not usually worth within four cents a pound of his price, we still do not think a buyer ordinarily takes that fact into consideration, and it is not probable that he would pay any more for hornless steers, other things being equal, than he would for those with horns.

Schwartzschild & Sulzberger Co.—Cattle of an equal quality, whether with or without horns, will realize the same price.

Armour.—Uniformity in color of any breed might influence the price, as it undoubtedly catches the eye, presenting a smoothness and evenness, as opposed to mixed lots.

Swift.—We do not consider that a lot of cattle of uniform color or breed (other than Holstein or Jersey) would bring any more than cattle of various colors and breeds equally as good; for instance, a prime load of half Shorthorns and half Angus would bring a much as any equally choice lot of Shorthorn or all Angus.

Cudahy.—The fact that a lot of cattle are uniform in color or in breed does not enhance their value in the eyes of the practical buyer. A bunch, however, all of one color, might strike a buyer as being "pretty" and fool him into giving a higher price than they were actually worth on the market.

Hammond.—Color makes no difference as to the value of cattle for use in this country. For export, black Polled cattle, reds, roans and those having the Hereford white faces are most sought.

Schwartzschild.—A bunch of steers well fed and of equal quality, but of various colors, will bring as much as if they were all of one color and breed; yet those of one color, for instance, red, may be preferable to some buyers. White and yellow are objectionable to some.

Armour.—The damage to hides that could be avoided if cattle had no horns is probably slight. In most cases the damage would only occur to the beef by causing bruises, and would not really injure or penetrate the hide. Horn scratches, however, are the subject of complaint from tanners, and cause them to discriminate.

Swift.—A very small percentage of damage done to market value of hides would be avoided if cattle had no horns.

Cudahy.—On Texas cattle, about one-half the hides are damaged by horns to the extent of about 60 cents per hide. The hides of native cattle are not damaged in our judgment over one-tenth of one per cent. by horns.

Hammond.—If cattle had no horns it would change the market value of the hides very nearly $1 each.

Source of the Mighty Niger.

An English officer thus describes the th. source of the mighty River Niger: "Cutting our way through the undergrowth, we crept and clambered down the slippery slopes till we reached the bottom, and came to a moss-covered rock from which a tiny spring issues, and has made a pool below. The foliage at this spot is green, most luxuriant and beautiful, and as one looks on the birthplace of the Niger it is easy to imagine one's self at a dripping well in some wood in England."

The Cause of Dyspepsia.

From the Republican, Scranton, Penna. The primary cause of dyspepsia is lack of vitality; the absence of nerve force; the loss of the life-sustaining elements of the blood. No organ can properly perform its function when the source of nutriment fails. When the stomach is robbed of the nourishment demanded by nature, assimilation ceases, unnatural gases are generated; the entire system responds to the disorder. A practical illustration of the symptoms and tortures of dyspepsia is furnished by the case of Joseph T. Vandye, 440 Hickory St., Scranton, Pa.

In telling his story, Mr. Vandye says: "Five years ago I was afflicted with a trouble of the stomach, which was very aggravating. I had no appetite, could not enjoy myself at any time, and especially was the trouble severe when I awoke in the morning. I did not know what the ailment was, but it became steadily worse and I was in constant misery."

"I called in my family physician, and he diagnosed the case as catarrh of the stomach. He prescribed for me and I had his prescription filled. It took nearly all of the medicine, but still the trouble became worse, and I felt that my condition was hopeless. I tried several remedies recommended by my friends but without benefit. After I had been suffering several months, Thomas Campbell, a resident of this city, urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People."

"He finally persuaded me to buy a box and I began to use the pills according to directions. Before I had taken the second box I began to feel relieved, and after taking a few more boxes, I considered myself restored to health. The pills gave me new life, strength, ambition and happiness."

"Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cured dyspepsia by restoring to the blood the requisite constituents of life, by renewing the nerve force and enabling the stomach to promptly and properly assimilate the food. These pills are a specific for all diseases having their origin in impoverished blood or disordered nerves. They contain every element requisite to general nutrition, to restore strength to the weak, good health to the ailing."

"Liquor," said the temperance orator, "causes nearly all the unhappiness there is in this world."

"That's right, Colonel!" exclaimed a Kentuckian in the back of the hall. "I'm always unhappy when I can't get a"

HORRORS OF OPIUM CAN BE CURED.

"I Feel in Fancy As if Awakened From an Uneasy Dream in My Relief From the Superhuman Power of Morphine."

Dr. B. M. WOOLLEY, Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Sir—I feel myself wholly inadequate to the task I am undertaking, and yet, in one respect, I may perhaps claim to be qualified. To express my appreciation and gratitude to God and yourself as His almost superhuman agents, for my complete restoration to real life, and I fondly hope a future usefulness, is a task of which I am totally incompetent. But to speak of my emotions, when I recognize of a truth that I have been emancipated from the bondage of a tyrant, more cruel and relentless than ever swayed scepter over a helpless people, I may find words to feebly express. I do not wish to indicate that I have a mind of commanding powers yet I hope it may exhibit at least a heart of deepest gratitude.

Fifteen years ago I was the victim of severe acute rheumatism; my suffering was intense and almost unbearable. Three noted physicians in succession failed in their honest endeavors to give me relief. The fourth, my favorite, who was indisposed himself, when I was first attacked, finally came to my bedside. He, in his anxiety and sympathy to lull the pain and induce sleep, thought best to give me at intervals a small quantity of morphine. Ignorant of its wonderful power, I continued its use for several days, and then it was that I awoke to the sad realization that I was bound in chains which no human power or will could break asunder. Since the fatal hour I became an involuntary and unconscious victim of that fascinating and yet most potent drug, as the greatest enemy and destroyer of human hope and ambition, mine has been a weary pilgrimage in the dark, ever dying, yet could not die. Many times during the passing of those fifteen long and dreary years, and especially since the death of one of the best women that ever wore the sacred crown of wife, I was tempted to snap asunder the silver cord of life and leap to meet the nameless terror of the great unknown. And if perchance I had committed the awful deed the world would have cried out "insane," whereas nothing
