

For District Attorney.

To the Democratic Voters of the Nineteenth Judicial District:

I beg to hereby announce my candidacy for the office of District Attorney at the approaching primary election.

My candidacy for this important office is based upon the belief which is entertained as to my fitness for the position and ability to give efficient public service.

In event of my election it will be my policy to strictly enforce the law, impartially and vigorously.

If elected I will serve the Police Jurors of the Parishes comprising this district, as legal adviser, without compensation, as I construe this to be the intention of the law which fixes the duties and compensation of this office.

If the above brief outline of the conduct of the office of District Attorney meets with your approval, I shall appreciate your vote and support.

Respectfully,
GORDAN A. SANDOZ.

To Control The Spread of State Diseases.

Modern Sugar Planter.

In the endeavor to bring about a more perfect system of sanitary procedure in connection with the proper disposal of carcasses, many of which in the past have escaped destruction and spread disease through the medium of infected tissues. Dr. E. Pegram Flower, Secretary, the Louisiana State Livestock Sanitary Board, announces the promulgation of a State regulation bearing thereon, which reads:

In order to prevent and control the spread of anthrax or charbon, hog-cholera, or other contagious, infectious, or communicable diseases of animals in the State, through possible error in diagnosis and the careless and sanitary disposal of diseased carcasses, it shall be the duty of the Police Jury of each parish to appoint one or more persons in each Justice of the Peace Ward as livestock sanitary officers, whose duty shall be to attend to the immediate and sanitary disposal of the carcasses of all animals dying in his or their respective wards in the manner prescribed by the Secretary and Executive Officer of the Louisiana State Livestock Sanitary Board, to-wit:

The carcasses of all animals shall be immediately disposed of by burning or by burial in one or other of the following ways:

Burning.—A suitable trench shall be dug about two feet deep by two or three feet wide, and of sufficient length to accommodate the number of carcasses to be burned at one time. Across the top of the trench should be placed a sufficient number of green poles, or iron bars, if available, to act as a griddle on which to place the carcasses. The trench should be filled with kindling wood of some kind, and after the carcass is placed on the poles, or bars, it should be heaped up with heavier wood, and the whole saturated with coal oil and set fire to.

In some sections of the State, wood may be scarce, while coal oil may be plentiful. In this case, a sufficient number of old gunny sacks, or other easily inflammable material that will absorb the oil and act as a wick, should be placed in the bottom of the trench and kept saturated with the oil. Or, the oil from a barrel placed at a safe distance, may be conducted into the trench through a pipe, and the flow so regulated as to keep the absorbent material constantly saturated with it. In any case, the burning shall be continued until the whole of the carcass is consumed in order to destroy every particle of infection.

The trench method of cremating, or burning, is much less expensive than by burning the carcass upon the surface of the ground, as by the former a draft is created, and with fire above and below, consumption is much quicker and with much less expense of time and material.

Burial.—A hole, or pit, shall be dug of not less than six feet deep, so that there shall be a space of not less than four feet from the upper surface of the body of the carcass to the surface of the ground.

Where there is suspicion, or the fact is known, that an animal has died of a contagious, infectious, or communicable disease, such as charbon, or anthrax, hog-cholera, etc., four to six inches of lime shall be placed over the bottom of the hole, or pit, the surface of the carcass covered with lime to the same depth, and the hole filled in with earth.

A hole or pit for this purpose shall not be dug in the vicinity of any water course, or well, in order that contamination of such water supply, by infection from the carcass, may be prevented.

In communities where public animal crematories are available, carcasses may be disposed of in such crematories.

Where possible, and practicable, carcasses shall be disposed of either by burning or burial, where they lie, or are found.

When carcasses have to be removed for proper sanitary disposal, they shall be conveyed to the place of final disposition, in, or on, some suitable vehicle, as a wagon, cart, sled, etc., and not dragged along the road, highway, or field, as infection may very easily be spread in this way.

In case of the removal of charbonous carcasses, especially, the natural body-opening shall be plugged up, or stopped, with lint cotton or tow saturated with an effective germicidal agent, such as crude carbolic acid, etc., to prevent and disinfect any discharges that would otherwise issue from such openings and leave fresh centers of infections. And, the ground on which such carcasses shall have laid, previous to removal, shall be burned over or carefully and thoroughly sprinkled with a strong solution of crude carbolic acid, the various coal tar dips, or other effective germ destroying agent, in order eradicate whatever infection may have been left on said ground.

All vehicles used in the removal of carcasses, and particularly of infected carcasses, shall be thoroughly disinfected with some effective germ-killing agent, such as those already mentioned, immediately after being used. When the vehicles are of little or no monetary value, it is safest to burn them up after using.

While careful sanitary burial in the ground, as above given, may be quite effective, the process of burning, as described, is safer; is the true hygienic method at disposing of carcasses of all kinds; and is the one urgently recommended in all cases when possible by the Louisiana State Livestock Sanitary Board.

The police juries are hereby authorized and empowered to prescribe such penalties as they may deem necessary for the punishment of the sanitary officers appointed by them who fail to perform, or neglect, their duties.

Any owner, or owners of such carcasses who shall in any way interfere with the sanitary orders of the police jury or its livestock sanitary officer, or officers, shall be guilty of misdemeanor as provided by Act 274 of the Session of 1908.
