The Value Of a Silo.

That the silo is a valuable fixture to have on the farm is a fact well known to every one that has investigated the proposition. That the cattle appreciate the succulent feed the silo provides in winter and that it is a great thing for them is proved by the following incident.

"A farmer living near Eunice, Indiana, had three silos. One year, according to his statement, he made about half a corn crop and was short of material for silage. On his farm was a low marshy place that, because of its situation, could not be drained without expense out of proportion to its value, and which every year grew a prolific crop of tall, tender succulent weeds. The cattle, however, would not eat the weed.

This short crop year he decided to fill one of his silos with the weed. The drouth which had cut his crop short had also dried the marsh so that he was able to get into it with his mower, so the weeds were cut, cut into silage and one of the silos filled with it. Toward the latter part of the winter, when the corn silage had given out, he offered the weeds to the cattle. At first they refused it, then began to nibble at it, and soon were eating it with evident relish. It made a very satisfactory feed.

The incident merely shows the value of green feed in the winter and that the silo will even make valuable feed out of an otherwise worthless weed.—Farm & Ranch.

Twenty-two and Kissless.

Baltimore, Feb. 6.—"I don't believe wives should kiss their husbands; I don't believe anybody ought to kiss"

This was a reply of Mrs. Theresa Deems, 22 years old and comely, when asked by the court if she did not want to kiss her husband and make up. The Judge paroled George W. Deems, who had been arraigned on a charge of non-support, on condition that he pay $3 a week toward the support of his wife and 7-year-old child.

Mrs. Deems said afterward that she had never been kissed, not even by her parents, and that she would not kiss her child, whom she loved "more than her own life," because she did not believe in kissing.
