Combating The Black Weevil.

The black weevil is the worst enemy of corn from the time it begins to mature in the field until it is disposed of by feeding or selling on the market. This insect lives during the winter months in crevices in the cribs, barns and other adjacent buildings. Very few of them will spend the winter in the field.

The eggs are deposited in the buildings as soon as the weather becomes warm in the spring. The first generation emerges some time in May. Corn fields located near the farm buildings are the first to become infested, as large numbers of adult weevils emigrate during the farm days of the spring and summer.

Breeding begins in the fields usually when the ears are fit for roasting. If the field is near woodland the number moving into it may be as large as from buildings. Early corn always fares worse than that which matures late. It may be feasible to plant some early corn for the weevil to feed upon, leaving the other almost free. The tight shuck is essential and can be secured by field selection.

Carbon bisulphide is the material to use in combating the weevil. The gas formed is heavier than air, hence it will go to every part of the corn. The crib must be air-tight when it is used, to secure the best results. The amount to use is from twenty to twenty-five pounds per 1000 cubic feet of space, whether the crib is filled with corn or not. Warm weather is the best time to use it as the weevil becomes inactive when the temperature is as low as 60 degrees.—A. F. Kidder, L. S. U.

A Compliment To The Jews.

Lafourche Comet.

At low mass last Sunday Rev. Father John Murgue delivered an interesting sermon upon egotism and charity, showing conclusively how important it is that we, as Christians, should not let out egotistical tendencies cause us to think of and consider nothing but matters pertaining to ourselves. We should, he said, display charity for our fellow-man, not necessarily by giving him money, but by doing whatever we can to assist him and make his life more pleasant. In this respect, he declared, there are no people who excel the Jews. They never refuse to contribute toward any charitable undertaking and when one of their blood is in trouble they are ever ready to extend a helping hand. "It is for this reason" added Father Murgue, "they are so successful."

Tractors On Sugar Plantations

Some weeks ago, an announcement was made that, Henry Ford, builder and manufacturer of the famous Ford Automobile, had purchased a large plot of ground on which he had planned to erect a large factory equipped with all of the latest machinery for the manufacture of light tractors. The article said that Mr. Ford expected to build a tractor that would do all the work on the ordinary farm, and that it would cost $250 complete.

The announcement caused great interest throughout the United States, and especially in this section where the power used to do the work in the fields has been exceedingly heavy. The original price to stock a plantation with a sufficient number of mules to cultivate it, plus the expense of feeding them, requires a small fortune alone. If the tractor will remove this heavy expense, and furnish the planter the means of a machine that will do his work better and perhaps at one-eight the present cost, surely we will be glad to welcome the tractor with our warmest hand-shake. — The Napoleouville Pioneer.

Commission men in certain parts of Ohio, realizing the value of good roads to their business, have arranged to offer to farmers in territory adjacent to their towns, a series of prizes for the best kept stretches of county highway running through the various farms. They rightfully believe that many of the maintenance problems can be solved by securing the farmer's co-operation, and their efforts to secure this co-operation are to be highly recommended.
