A Southern Kid Co.

La petite Eileen only 6 years old play the title roll in the roaring musical farce comedy "A Southern Kid." She is supported by a clever company and they come highly recommended.

The rainy season has interfered seriously with planting operations. Some planters are not through yet and the season is far advanced. News comes to us from lower Terrebonne that some planters have not been able to plant scarcely any cane. Grave fears are entertained lest the seed cane will be much affected if not to tally lost.

Over 40 musical number in "A Southern Kid." Opera House Monday night, March 7th.

Father Dubourg requests us to announce that on Wednesday, the 9th inst., at 8 A. M. there will be a mass said at St. Joseph's Church, by Rev. A. Petillo, an Italian priest, for the benefit of the Italians. The hours of instruction will be given by the missionary.

We reproduce from the Terrebonne Times: "In the flourishing little city of Thibodaux, La., on last Thursday, at the St. Joseph Catholic Church, Miss Emma Boudreaux, daughter of Mr. Treville Boudreaux, was united in the holy bonds of wedlock to Mr. Edward Ayo, in the presence of a host of friends and acquaintances. The TIMES extends congratulations to the happy pair, made one, by the holy marriage rite of the church.

Mr. E. P. Roberts, recently connected with this office, went to Houma last Tuesday on business. Mr. Roberts is making all necessary preparations to soon embark in the mercantile business in our sister town. While wishing him success, we beg to assure the good citizens of Houma that he is in every way worthy of their confidence and support, and our loss will be their gain, for Mr. Roberts is a young man of sterling quality who will prove a valuable acquisition to any community in which he may cast his lot.

NECROLOGICAL.

Monday night, last Aubin Bourg, clerk of court, of the parish of Terrebonne, quietly passed away from this life at his home in the town of Houma, aged 65 years. Up to within about two months ago he always had been in so good health, that none of his friends or of his immediate family ever dreamed that the end of his modest but noble career was so near. About that time he was seized with the fatal malady which carried him away, and which, for a time, puzzled his attending physicians, and baffled their skill. All that human love could suggest, or human skill do, to avert approaching death proved unavailing, for the decree of Divine Providence had gone forth, and the tender husband, the loving father, the model citizen, the true man, was called to his eternal rest.

Aubin Bourg was one nature's true noblemen. Left an orphan at a tender age, reared in poverty, he lifted himself up by his own exertions among his fellowmen and became one of the foremost, one of the most highly respected and esteemed citizen of his adopted parish. At the time of his death he was the most popular and best beloved man of Terrebonne. He was the friend of all, but in a special manner, the friend of the poor and of those in the humbler walks of life. No one ever appealed to him for assistance, counsel or advice, and went away empty handed, but his charity, was of that genuine make which conceals from the left hand that which the right hand does.

Aubin Bourg filled many offices of trust in his life, and always acceptably and creditably. In early life, he occupied the position of deputy clerk of court of this parish under the late Col. Louis Bush, and, then, moved, marrying and settling in Terrebonne, he there assumed a prominent part in its affairs and served the people in many capacities. He was filling his second term as clerk of court at the time of his death, and the universal testimony of the people of that parish is that he made an excellent official whose loss to the community is very great, and whom it will be difficult to replace.

The deceased was very domestic in his habits, and much loved and adored by his wife and children, to all of whom he was strongly attached and devoted, and ever kind, gentle and fatherly. Indeed, he possessed the "milk of human kindness" to such an extent that not only the members of his family and his intimate friends felt the genial influence of his gentleness but all persons of his acquaintance who ever had any business or social relations with him, came at some time or other under that subtle almost inexplicable spell, which is exhaled from a gentle and noble human heart, and makes all who ever experience it much the better for it.

His wife and children, all grown, will deeply mourn his loss and long cherish his fond memory, but in their sore affliction they will derive much human consolation in the consciousness that their dearly beloved led an exemplary life and died a Christian's death, and that hundreds of sympathizing friends silently and unobtrusively shared the poignant grief which presses so heavily upon their stricken hearts.

MRS. B. T. BLAKE.

Last Tuesday, at 4 o'clock p. m., Henriette Thibodaux, beloved wife of Bannan T. Blake, Esq., departed this life at her home at the early age of 21 years. The deceased died of consumption and had long been lingering between life and death. Her infant had preceded her to the tomb by just a few days, so that the Blake and Thibodaux families have been sorely tried, and have the sympathy of the community.

She was young and life was sweet to her, yet true Christian as she was she bore her illness with true Christian fortitude and looked upon death with the Christian's faith and hope of eternal salvation, and died an edifying death.

Mrs. Blake's funeral took place Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock at St. Joseph's Church.

R. I. P.

DAVIDSON.

Died in New Orleans, on February, 28th., after a lingering illness, in her 60th year, Cordelia Pugh Davidson, daughter of the late Augustus and Cintia Pugh, of Assumption parish. The interment took place Wednesday upon the arrival of the 11:30 train, at St. John's Episcopal cemetery.

A LARGE FUNERAL.—A friend writing us from Houma about the funeral of the late lamented Aubin Bourg, says: "It was the largest funeral ever witnessed in Houma. Thousands of people from various parts of the parish were in attendance and followed the body of the beloved deceased from his residence to the church, and thence to its last resting place in the cemetery, in the slow drizzling rain. Not one half of the people could enter the church; the remainder waited on the outside and craned their necks to catch a glimpse of the interesting ceremony and strained their ears to catch some stray notes of the plaintive chant of the solemn requiem mass and funeral service."

Notwithstanding the rain at the close of the service, the people followed the body to the cemetery, and stood around the grave until the service was concluded and the body deposited in the tomb."

"In our news column recently," says the Louis Republic, "there was published a modest little item which was good for the believer in the sound honesty of human nature to read. This item told briefly of the presence in St. Louis of a Texas merchant—one T. E. Powell of Baird—who had come to the city for the purpose of paying off the last dollar of an old indebtedness, payment of the larger portion of which he could easily have escaped under accepted commercial methods. This merchant had failed in business some two years ago. Most of his creditors were St. Louis houses. He was known to be a 'square' man. To lighten his misfortune he was urged, even by his creditors, to 'effect a settlement' on a basis of far less than the total amount of his indebtedness. This the Texas man refused to do. He notified his creditors that he intended to pay them 100 cents on the dollar for every dollar that he owed. Time alone was what he asked—time to recuperate and get his business running again. This was agreed to, and now, within two years, this Texas merchant comes to his St. Louis creditors with the money in hand to pay his debts to the last cent." The Republic adds:

"It is good for all folks to read a true story of this description. Not because honest men are rare—there are more honest men than rogues in the world—but because it is generally the rogues that we hear the most of, and this is calculated to depress those who are not firmly rooted in their conviction of the innate honesty of humanity. Such persons should take this case of Mr. Powell of Texas to heart. It is a timely and valuable object lesson."

NOT INVITED TO DINE.—A well known musician who writes an illegible hand once sent a unusually hopeless scrawl to a friend. The latter studied a minute, gave it up in despair, and then sat down and wrote in reply: "I shall be most happy to dine with you to-morrow at six. Kindest regards to your wife. Yours, etc." In less than half an hour his friend appeared, breathless, at his door. "There's some misunderstanding," said he, anxiously. "I wrote you a note asking if you could play the piano part of the trio at Brown's recital, and here you've sent me an acceptance of a dinner invitation; I'm sorry but I didn't invite you to dinner!" "Well, returned the other blantly, "I didn't suppose you'd really, sent me an invitation to dinner. But I couldn't read a word of your note, and in that case hereafter I mean always to take it for granted that your's asking me to dine." For one of his correspondent, at least, the offender now writes legibly.—Argonaut.
