feldspar. The sonorous phenomenon is exhibited only by the sand lying below the extreme high water mark but within that limit here and there are patches closely contiguous to the musical portions, which are silent. From Prof. Bolton, of Trinity, and Prof. Julien, of Columbia, most of the information on this subject is derived. The facts, as far as known, are these: The singing sand may occur in comparatively small patches in the midst of ordinary sand; it always occurs between the limits of high and low tide. The same sand does not produce sound at all seasons, nor does it always give forth like sounds, when wet it does not emit sounds. It has also been noticed that samples of this sand when transported in bags lost its sonorousness, but retained it when sent in bottles. Of course, many theories have been advanced to explain this phenomenon, but none of them seem entirely satisfactory. The most probable one is that it is produced by friction between the angular particles of the sand. Prof. Julien considers that the conditions of sonorousness in sands are perfect dryness, uniformity of grain, varying from one-fifth to one tenth of an inch in diameter, and freedom from dust. Sonorous sands are now known to be widely distributed throughout the world. They have been found on the coasts of Scotland and the Hebrides; on the coast of California, in Nevada and on the northwest shore of Lake Champlain; along the shores of the Carribean Sea, where in some places it is said to be as loud as the barking of a dog and in several places in Asia. The phenomenon is therefore widely distributed.—Boston Herald.

A German writer says: "Humor is the endemological pessimism, which includes within itself the teleological evolutionary optimism, which may cause a truly, that is to say, an at once realistieradical and universal reconciliation to appear as possible." We have often noticed that, but we, never permit any of that sort of stuff to paralyze our paragraphs if we can help it.—Norristown Herald.
