

Old Doubleskull has just found out that quinine is a medicine. He says that he thought all along that it was the name of some confounded base ball club.

"That's the smallest horse I ever saw," said a countryman, on viewing a Shetland pony. "Indeed, now," replied his Irish companion, "but I have seen one as small as two of him."

A young man has been courting one girl five years, and every time he has called during the past six months she has fed him on pop corn. But he does not take the hint—and pop.

When the girl who has encouraged a young man for about two years suddenly turns around and tells him she can never be more than a sister to him, he can for the first time see the freckles on her nose.

"Never leave what you undertake until you can reach your arms around it and clench your hands on the other side," says a recently published book for young men. Very good advice; but what if she screams?

A gentle, spirituelle woman who can't go out into the back yard to hang up the week's washing for fear of catching cold, will gallivant all over a wet beach for two hours in a bathing suit, and flop around in the suit a whole forenoon.

Time flies, but about this time of the year flies take their time in flying off one's nose when they know you have both hands full of type, disregarding all modern combinations of cuss words that a practical printer can coin in the space of five minutes.

A colored man appeared before a magistrate, charged with some trivial offense. The latter said to the man: "You can go now; but let me warn you never to appear here again." The man replied with a broad grin: "I wouldn't be here this time, only the constable fetch me."

A Georgia newspaper expresses the opinion that the dreadful scourge of gambling in futures has done more to impoverish the South than the drought, the caterpillar, the Freedmen's Bureau, the spurious gins, the radical reconstruction, and the insurance companies all combined.

A gentleman just returned from the mother country states that while spending a month in the country houses he met a number of young English girls, and while he found them exceedingly beautiful, they were "tremendously useless," just what the Englishman says of the American women.

An Oxford lover, soft as mush, kissed his girl about forty times right along the other evening, and when he stopped the tears came into her eyes, and she said in a sad tone of voice: "Ah! John, I fear you have ceased to love me." "No, I haven't," replied John, "but I must breathe." Moral.—Pull down the blinds.

"Show me a greenbacker," said a darkey, holding a ten dollar bill in his hand near the post office. "I am one," said an Independent. "You is den dem dis torn up currency and gin me a new dollar." "Couldn't do that, Jim." "Dat's nuff den; how you speak for us cullud folks to stan by you when you don't rebelih de paper ob your flat form?—Vicksburg Commercial.

An Irishman was going along a road, when an angry bull rushed down upon him, and, with his horns, tossed him over the fence. The Irishman, recovering from his fall, upon looking up saw the bull pawing and tearing up the ground, and said: "If it was not for your bowing and scraping your apologies, you brute, faix I should think you had thrown me over this fence on purpose."

When Mr. Wheeler read the telegram, which read "Hayes died to-day," he put his hands under his coat-tails, elevated his chin, and remarked: "I guess I'll run this 'ere Government for a while now." But when the telegram was corrected and made to read "Hayes died to-day," Wheeler sat down in a corner and remarked, "I consider the reporter a blasted fool who'll go telegraphing news all over the country every time Hayes eats a piece of pie."

Capt. J. D. DeRussey has been promoted to the rank of Major of the Fourth Infantry to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Major Thornburgh. He belongs to the DeRussey family of Louisiana, whose home was Grand Ecore, on Red river. There were two brothers—one in the Federal and the other in the Confederate army, and this is a son of the Federal General. He entered the First Infantry, at the beginning of the war, from West Point, and we understand bore himself throughout like a gallant and honorable soldier.

When a bee brings pollen into the hive, he advances to the cell into which it is deposited and kicks it off; another bee, one of the indoor hands comes along and rams it down with his head and packs it into the cell as a dairymaid packs butter into a firkin.—(John Burlinghous). We would prefer not to have any dairymaid pack our butter that way.—(Travelers' Records). If our butter must be packed in that way, let it be done by a bald-headed dairymaid.—(Rome Sentinel). We will add that in either case it would be dand ruff on the butter.—(Bee Keepers Exchange).

A newspaper proprietor advertised for an advertisement canvasser, and his test of the applicant's fitness, when they appeared, was to tell them to get out of his office or he would kick them out. Several timid young men turned tail and left him with great disgust; but one, more brazen-faced than the rest, nothing daunted by the threat, coolly sat himself down and swore he would not go until his testimonial had been read. So he locked the door, put the key in his pocket, and handed in his paper. "Ah," said the advertiser, "you'll do, I can see. I'm enough for me. No one will ever succeed as an advertisement canvasser who will be influenced by a threat to be kicked out of any office. You evidently understand your business."

Power of Kindness.

"There is a chapter in my life's history that I have always kept locked in my heart," said John Hayland, as he faced the little group in the parlor; "but tonight I feel it my duty to open it for your inspection, and I do it for the love of a woman—for the love of a woman who made me what I am worthy to be, the husband of a good woman."

"Why, John," said Mrs. Hayland, softly approaching—babe still held tight to her bosom—"you frighten me."

"Let's have the story," said the rest of the group, certain that something good might be anticipated; and John commenced, at first a little timid, but gaining confidence as he proceeded.

"When I first came to New York at the age of 12 years, to seek my fortune, I can call myself a precocious chap, without danger of being accused of an unusual degree of self-appreciation. I was quick to learn everything, the bad as well as the good. My employer used profane language. I picked up the oaths he dropped with a naturalness that surprised even myself. The boys in the office all elbowed tobacco. This was little the hardest job I ever attempted, but after weeks of nausea and indescribable stomach wrenchings, I came off victorious, and could get away my plug a day with the best of 'em."

"One afternoon I was sent with a note from my employer to a house in the upper part of the city. I hadn't anything to read, but I had plenty of tobacco, and with that I proposed to entertain myself during the two or three hours I must spend in the passage. For some distance I did not notice who was beside me, but by-and-by a lady said, very softly and pleasantly: 'Would you please be more careful, little boy? I am going to a party this afternoon, and should hate to have my dress spoiled.'

"I looked into her face. It was the sweetest I ever saw. With a loving and loving—to my boyish heart it was the countenance of an angel."

"What did you say?" interrupted Mrs. Hayland, her bright eyes filling with tears as she saw how the memory of this beautiful woman affected her husband.

"Say! There was very little I could say. I think all I did for some time was to look."

"I managed to dispose of the tobacco, however, and wiped my mouth very carefully, all of which I felt certain, she saw and mentally commented upon."

"Have you a mother, little boy?" she next asked, in the same voice.

"No, ma'am, I answered, and I felt my throat filling up, and I knew I must swallow mighty fast to keep from sobbing."

"You have a father, then, I suppose?" she kept on.

"No, ma'am; no father."

"Brothers and sisters?"

"Neither, ma'am."

"Then you are alone in the world?"

"All alone, ma'am."

"How long has your mother been dead and the dear woman looked away from my face, and waited till I could speak."

"Two years," I answered.

"And you loved her?" came next.

"Dearest, was all I could say."

She was silent for a moment, and then she said so sweetly—oh! I shall never forget it—

"And what do you think your dear mother would say—how do you think she would feel—to know that her little boy was guilty of such a disgusting habit as that of pointing to the tell-tale quid which I vainly tried to hide beneath the seat."

"I must leave now," she continued, but here is my card, and, if you will come to see me this evening I shall be glad to see you, and perhaps we can be of some service to each other."

"She gave me her little gloved hand, and to my dying day I shall never forget the sensation of that moment. I could not bear to part with her; without her I felt I could do nothing—with her I could grow to man's estate—a man in the truest sense of the word. From that moment tobacco never passed my lips."

"As soon as I could summon the courage I called upon the lady. Will do I remember how my heart beat as I waited in the elegant parlor for her to come down, and how awkward I felt as I followed my guide to her private sitting room. She got at every point in my life, and before I bade her good-bye it was arranged that I should spend two evenings of each week at her house and study on the occasions just what she thought best."

"No lover ever looked forward to meetings with the mistress of his heart any more ardently than I did to these meetings with my friend."

"I grew careful of my personal appearance, careful of my conversation, and strove in every way to be worthy of the noble friendship. Two years passed in this delightful manner—two years that made me. My friend not only attended to my studies, striving also all the while to sow the right kind of spiritual seed, but she procured me a business situation with a friend of hers, where I remain to this day. Nobody but God knows what I owe this woman. During the last three months of those two years I noticed that she grew constantly pale and thin; she never was betrayed into speaking of herself. Sometimes, when I would ask her if she felt worse than usual, she would reply:

"Oh, no! I am only a little tired—that is all."

"One evening she kept me by her sofa much longer than was her custom, while she arranged lessons and laid out work, it seemed to me, for months."

"Why so much to-night?" I inquired, conscious that my heart ached, and vaguely suspecting the cause.
