shadow of the monument which commemorates his services to the world.

The monument is of granite. The design is the work of Architect Brigham of Boston. Work on the structure began in the summer of 1899, and has continued ever since. The major portion of the stone work and carving was finished last December, and since March of this year expert Italian stone cutters have been at work at the impressive figures of "Grief" and "Memory," which are carved in bas relief on the face of the plasters at either end of the monument, to the right and left of the massive bronze allegorical figure of a driller, which will form the central piece.

Between the bronze and the carved pilasters are broad panels on which, in old English lettering, are carved facts and eulogies of the life and work of Colonel Drake.

The bronze statue was a happy afterthought and did not form part of the original design of the monument. In the original plan a fountain was to form the center, but early in the progress of the work the idea of the statue of a driller was suggested and carried out.
