The marshal had his revolver taken away from him and he was knocked down and pummeled considerably before he got away. He secured reinforcements, however, and succeeded in arresting the ringleaders of the toughs and the rest took flight.

Leo. G. Rogers, who lives north of Carrollton, and who served as a private in Roosevelt's rough riders under the command of Ham. Fish, Jr., received last Monday from J. Carley & Bro. of New York a beautiful silver mounted knife from the mother of young Fish, as a memento of her son and the battle in which he fought and was killed. On one side of the knife is inscribed: "Las Gausimus, June 24, '98," and on the reverse side, "Souvenir of Ham. Fish to his comrades in Troop 1, R. R. R." When the troop returned from Cuba to Montauk Point, Mrs. Fish visited the camp, became personally acquainted with each surviving member of her son's company and promised each a memento. Every member of the troop has received a knife similar to Rogers' and is justly proud of it.

A Word to Girls.

Young girls, do you realize the power you hold in your hand for good or evil? It is yours to do what no one else can accomplish. The mother has trained her boy as well as she knows how, but when he has reached a certain age he is apt to be beyond her reach, and at this time he steps under the influence of the girls with whom he associates. She can now go on and bring to completion the work the mother has toiled so hard to perfect, or she can tear down and destroy what has already been done. My heart burns within me when I think of the mighty work that might be done by the young women of today did they realize their power and rightly use it.

The opportunity is yours now to work a reform that will reach the uttermost parts of the earth. Oh, girls, do consider your influence, and use it rightly, lest some one of your associates may be led astray because you thought lightly of your influence.

If your boy friends indulge in things you do not approve, have the courage to speak out your disapproval, and my word for it he will respect you more for it and be more careful of his conduct in the future.

Did you ever think that to allow smoking in your presence you are wanting in proper respect for yourself, and in proportion to the respect you have for yourself will you be respected by others.

I once heard a young lady remark that she did not like to see boys too feminine—just as if actions that are wrong for a girl are not equally wrong for a boy. I fear it is this idea that makes boys anxious for habits that he hopes may be taken for marks of manliness.

It is yours, dear girls, to frown upon and deprecate while such habits are just beginning to be made, and thereby save some boy of the attending evils of such a course.

Crying Artistically.

"Very few women know how to cry properly," said a cold-blooded observer, "but if they realized how potent tears are as a weapon they would spare no pains in learning to shed them gracefully. As a rule brunettes cry much better than blondes. I call to mind, for instance, a very pretty little lady who was a litigant in court some years ago, and who wept when a certain portion of the testimony was reached. As the critical moment approached her eyes began to swim. They seemed to grow larger and darker, and they took on a wistful and appealing look that made every man in the jury-box feel as if he wanted to climb right out and hit the plaintiff with a club. Her lips were quivering and presently two great big tears rolled softly down her cheeks. That settled it. I was foreman of the jury, and we were exactly a minute and a half in giving her a verdict. Now if that had happened to some other women, equally worthy but of lighter complexion, the chances are her nose would have turned pink and her eyes would have assumed a slightly inflamed appearance that would have been very damaging to her cause. If she had sniffled, as they usually do, I can't say what the result might have been. A woman who can cry artistically can have anything she wants. I am surprised that it isn't taught."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.
