Pleasant Evening Reveries—A Column Dedicated to Tired Mothers as They Join the Home Circle at Evening Tide

LOVE RETAINED

In our estimation there is no subject of more interest to womankind than that of retaining a husband's love. Of course when a young couple start to make the home nest they are surrounded with the glow of romance and sentimentalism, and life seems all rose-tinted. But by degrees the stern, prosaic side of life is shown, and for the first time they realize that life is not all a bed of roses; that there is bitter mingled with the sweet. Gradually they get accustomed to each other's society. He does not rush home as eagerly as in the first few weeks of their married life. One day he is much later than usual in coming home to dinner, and she is careless about his company, too; so she has gone out to see a neighbor; he has to go in the dining room and eat dinner alone. He means to go home quite early that evening by way of atonement, but unfortunately business detains, and it is a little later than usual ere he can leave his office, but he hurries home because he knows or thinks he does, that some one is waiting to welcome him, but alas for human hopes. When he reaches home, instead of the radiant face and bewitching smile which he expected to see, his wife has retired; she feels so much aggrieved that not one pleasant word does the poor tired husband get. She means to teach him that his society is not of so much importance after all, and, well, he learns the lesson. Next evening he stops for a chat with an old chum, finds it very pleasant to resume past relations and be "one of the boys" again. And so that tiny rift within the lute has wrought discord in the once happy home. She wonders why he no longer courts her society as of yore. Let us whisper a word of advice right here. Let your husband know by word and deed that there are no hours so sweet as those spent by the fireside with him; that you prefer his company to all others. Make your home so bright and attractive that he will be anxious to spend all the time he can in the cozy little nook and last, but not least, make yourself as charming as possible. You need not think he does not care how you look. Oh, yes, he does, and you should curl your bangs or crimp your hair as prettily and dress as becomingly as when you were a girl and dressed to meet your lover.

We wish every mother could dream this dream. "The world may spare her, but her home cannot." There are no children but need a mother's care and love. They are more responsive and obedient to a tie of blood than to a tie created by law. Does she inquire, then, how can she economize her forces that they may last; how she can burn less fuel, that her little fire of life may burn brightly and long? My answer is, let women try to give to things their true importance. It will make no difference in a week's or a year's time how windows and woodwork look today; it will make a difference whether the children are perfectly nourished physically and trained mentally. Learn to do the most important things first, and if your strength ebbs, learn to let the minor things wait. Try to get something out of life for all you put into it. Enjoy something today, for tomorrow may never be yours. People ought to get more than an existence with such help as sunshine and song, laughter and friendship.

It is generally conceded that to a great extent the mother makes the home, yet altogether too few of us realize this regarding ourselves. Are we not prone to look at and criticize others while our own methods are in need of improvement? It is like seeing the mote in a brother's eye while the beam is in our own. Very few of us can scan our neighbors without finding many things upon which we could improve.

Learn to laugh. A good laugh is better than medicine. Learn how to tell a story. A good story is as welcomed as a sunbeam in a sick room. Learn to keep your own troubles to yourself. The world is too busy to care for your ills and sorrows. Learn to stop croaking. If you can not see any good in this world, keep the bad to yourself. Learn to hide your aches and pains under a pleasant smile. No one cares to hear whether you have the carache, headache or rheumatism. Learn to meet your friends with a smile. The good humored man or woman is always welcome, but the dyspeptic or hypochondriac is not wanted anywhere, and is a nuisance as well.

December is that one month of the year when the conduct, or deportment of the average child improves about ninety-nine and nine-tenths per cent. This change begins to manifest itself early in the month and continues to grow until the twenty-fifth when a perfect halo of innocence and virtue illuminates their faces. If we could have three or four Christmases a year, the reform schools would have to go out of business.

Some would find fault where others would not think of looking for it.
