HOW TO BURN CHOLERA CARCASSES.

The burial of hogs dying of cholera is not advisable. The germs of the disease will last a long time in the earth under favorable conditions and are liable to cause a new outbreak. The safest way to dispose of a carcass is to burn it.

In a bulletin issued by the Better Farming Association farmers are advised that burning may be easily accomplished in the following manner: Dig two trenches a few inches deep intersecting each other at right angles. At the intersection of these, cornstalks, cobs, or other fuel may be laid. Over the trenches may next be laid strips of metal to support the carcass. Before being placed over the supports, the abdominal and thoracic cavities should be opened and be liberally sprinkled with kerosene. Then the hog should be placed belly down ward over the fuel. As soon as the material in the trenches is ignited, it will rapidly spread to the kerosene and fat, and the body will be quickly consumed.

If a large iron wheel is handy, it may be substituted with good results for the trench and the iron bars.

Dairying Paid This Man Well

HOW AN OHIO MAN MAKES MONEY RUNNING A DAIRY FARM.

To the Editor: When I was a kid, back home in Delta, Ohio, there was a man named M. B. Hoyt who worked for my father in our brick yard. Hoyt saved part of his wages each month and when he got enough money ahead he went out in the country and rented a piece of land and started farming, gradually getting into dairy stock. I was mightily pleased to read in our old home paper that Hoyt was now at the top of all the milk producers of Fulton county, having received a check for over $500 for November, being the largest ever paid to one farmer in the county for a single month's product, and for December his check is sure to exceed that of November.

Mr. Hoyt is a firm believer in the cow as a money maker and the necessity of the dairyman to study and know every feature of the game, as to breeding, care and feeding. He began building up from his best cows and a registered sire, keeping a registered sire all the time until now his complete herd is practically full blood.

Two silos have been erected. It was intended to use one for summer feeding and one for winter, but they are not of sufficient capacity for the size of the herd and additional silos will be built.

A few years ago land down that way was not rated very highly, but today a farm near my old home is worth $150 to $200 an acre.
