Blame the War!

Not Your Druggist

If the price of the last prescription you had filled seemed to be high; if the dime bottle of castor oil has shrunk in size; if the number of 3-grain quinine capsules for a dime has fallen off a couple or so--don't blame the druggist; he's not at fault. It is just the same old thing that is blamed for nearly everything nowadays--

THE EUROPEAN WAR

The war has cut off the drug imports from the foreign countries and the old law of supply and demand comes in. The demand for drugs of all kinds far exceeds the supply the American drug importers can obtain and naturally the price goes up. That is the plain and simple reason why your drug bill calls for more money.

These Devils Lake druggists who are paying for this advertisement believe that it is better to tell their patrons exactly the condition of the drug markets and impress upon them that the scarcity of supply has caused the increasing prices. These druggists believe in taking the public into their confidence to the fullest extent and that is why this ad is published. Below you will find a table showing the comparative prices of drugs in 1914 and now. Read this table carefully, study the figures and you will not wonder why you pay more for your drugs.

To give you an idea of how drugs and chemicals have steadily increased in prices in the past two years, we submit below a list of some of the drugs generally used, and show the prices in 1914 and now---

	Old Price	Now		Old Price	Now
