YELLOW HAMMERS GET IN THEIR WORK

In reporting the proceedings of the County Commissioners the last week in October the following paragraph was printed in The Democrat:

"Finding from a report of the Auditor that the bridge fund was not sufficient to pay the expense of bridge construction, and that there was a credit balance of good proportion in the pike repair fund, the Board thereupon passed a resolution transferring $12,000 from the pike repair fund to the bridge fund."

Ordinarily this would not create much excitement, but enemies of the present Commissioners in the north end of the county have seized upon a slight omission in our report to discredit the new board. The word omitted that gave them a chance to use their hammers was "temporarily," which should have preceded "transferring $12,000," &c.

It made no difference to them when informed of The Democrat's error; that the Commissioner's journal ordering the transfer was public property and open to inspection, and in face of the fact that another paper of the county had the paragraph in question printed correctly. They must use their little hammers.

The transfer was made in the hope of saving some money to the people of the county in the way of interest on the issue of bonds made necessary by the construction of bridges. As the people were to vote on the question of raising their own bonds, the Commissioners naturally wanted to take advantage of the lower interest rate should the exemption be sanctioned. As it is, Mercer County taxpayers will get the benefit of the use of their own money on the "temporary" transfer of the pike repair fund.

Some people are in very small business, but after all it probably becomes them, and becomes them well.

VILLA'S VICTORY SEEMS COMPLETE

Federal Army Retreats After Two Day's Engagement—Rebels Return to Juarez.

Small Number of Dead and Wounded Leads to the Conclusion That Mexicans Are Poor Marksmen—Total Casualties Believed Less Than Three Hundred—Feds Not Expected to Renew the Attack.

El Paso, Tex., Nov. 27.—Casualties as a result of the federal attack upon the rebel army at Juarez are not nearly so numerous as reported. Excited people from the field declared the dead would total 600 or 800. They reported the wounded lying everywhere without medical attention or assistance. There are 184 wounded men in the improvised hospitals in Juarez under treatment.

The rebels say there are no more on the field. About 10 have died in the Juarez hospitals, bringing the total number of men brought from the battlefield as wounded men up to about 250. In the ordinary fortunes of war the dead should number about a third of this, or not over 70.

Newspaper men covered the battlefield in an automobile, yet failed to discover more than two dead bodies, both corpses of federals, who had their hands tied and had been executed, and two newly made graves. Nowhere was a dead body found. Dead horses, possibly 10 or 15, were discovered in a survey of several parts of the field.

Rebel officers say the dead were gathered up by a train and taken to one point and buried. Just where the spot was the rebels did not say.

Villa's victory over the federals was complete. There is no question of that. Villa is so well satisfied that he did not even press his advance.

After a brilliant coup that enabled him to capture Juarez and a defense of the place that was as brilliant as the attack, he stopped fighting when the federals retreated to Chihuahua and did not follow up his advantage. Villa and his army of 6,000 rebels returned to Juarez. Villa apparently is not expecting the federals to return, or has an ample guard farther south than the point at which the battle was fought.

All the visitors to the battlefield were surprised at the failure to find the field littered with dead. The small number of dead and wounded has been puzzling. The visitors were compelled to accept the general belief that Mexicans are bad marksmen and that the federals were probably as hungry as decimated when they quit the fight and retreated to Chihuahua.

CURRENCY BILL A PARTY MEASURE

Senators Vote to Hold Day and Night Sessions.

Washington, Nov. 27.—The Democrats in the senate finally have decided to resort to extreme measures to expedite currency legislation. They voted for morning and night sessions of the senate, beginning next Monday, the opening of the new session, and also to forego the usual holiday recess.

Furthermore they have decided to make the currency bill a party question and to commit senate Democrats to the support of it through the caucus rule. These steps have been taken in response to pressure from the White House, it is said. Never so far as Wilson observers could recall, has a new session started under conditions such as will be imposed on the one about to convene. The resolution imposing these conditions was offered by Senator O'Gorman of New York.

The action taken was wholly unexpected to the Republicans, and it was not seriously considered by the Democratic senators until after they were assembled in caucus and listened to a number of warnings from senators as to threatened business depression due to the delay in passing a currency bill.

BRILLIANT EVENT AT WHITE HOUSE

Jessie Wilson Becomes the Bride Frances Sayre—East Room Scene of Wedding.

Diplomatic Corps in Members of the Cabinet, Congressmen, Social Leaders and Relatives of Contracting Parties Witness the Ceremony—The Music, Decorations and Gowns.

Washington, Nov. 25.—Standing on a broad dais in the East room of the White House, Francis B. Sayre and Miss Jessie Wilson, daughter of President Wilson, were united in marriage this afternoon in the presence of a notable assemblage.

Rev. Sylvester W. Beach, of Princeton, N. J., officiated, assisted by Rev. John Nevlin Sayre, brother of the groom.

The wedding was one of the most beautifully appointed functions ever given in the White House. Flowers, music, gowns, decorations and arrangements had been attended to in masterly fashion. Guests included members of the diplomatic corps, representatives of the army and navy, supreme justices, leaders of the house and senate and social lights of the capital.

Miss Mary C. White of Baltimore, Miss Adeline Mitchell Scott of Princeton, Miss Marjorie Brown of Atlanta and Miss Eleanor Wilson were the bride's attendants.

An altar had been erected before the broad window at the east side of the East room, as was done for the Roosevelt wedding. Before the altar was a broad dais, on which the bridal party stood.

Miss Wilson, attended by her maids, entered the East room through the main doorway from the inner apartment of the house, leaning on the arm of her father. Mr. Sayre, Dr. William T. Grenfell of the Labrador mission, the best man, and Rev. Sylvester W. Beach awaited her at the altar. To one side was the diplomatic corps. Opposite them were the guests of the senate and the house, and in another group the personal friends of the Wilson family and the representatives of Washington residential society.

The music was elaborate. Miss Margaret Wilson, eldest daughter of the family, had this under her especial charge. She is an accomplished musician. The program which the United States Marine band played included selections from the works of the late Ethelbert Nevin, a cousin of the bridegroom. The boy choir of St. John's Episcopal church sang.

The wedding ceremony was simplicity itself, the usual formalities being observed. Following this, bride and groom were fairly deluged with congratulations.

The wedding gown worn by Miss Wilson was of heavy satin of a cream-white tint, so faint that it seems almost pure white. Rare old lace, heirlooms in the family of Mrs. Wilson, was freely used in embellishment of the bridal gown. The gown had a three-yard court train of the full width of the satin. The foundation skirt had the most fashionable lines—close at the feet and slightly crinkled at the hips. The skirt was slashed at the side seams in the back so that the bride might walk easily and gracefully, but the parting was entirely hidden by the folds of the train. The veil was of tulle, and orange blossoms were used to fasten its soft folds.

The bridesmaids wore white or the palest ivory crepe de chine in a new high-luster tint. The trimming was a tulle overdress of hydrangea net. The decorations of the East room are naturally suited for weddings. The general tones are cream white and dull gold. The golden brocade curtains were drawn, and the three gigantic electrolights of the room illuminated. The floral decorations consisted solely of bride roses and chrysanthemums, both of which blended well with the color scheme of the room.

President and Mrs. Wilson's gift to the bride was a set of exquisite mahogany dining room furniture.

After the honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. Sayre will reside in Williamstown, Mass. The Sayre family is one of the oldest in the country, dating back to 1634. Mr. Sayre in 1909 was secretary to Arctic Explorer Peary.

SUIT FOR DAMAGES RECALLS TRAGEDY

At Delphos, When Two Mercer County Girls Were Run Down and Killed at Crossing.

The damage suit brought by William Klein, as executor for Carrie and Anna Hartings, the two young girls who were killed when they were struck by Pennsylvania fast train No. 22, at the Jefferson street crossing in Delphos and instantly killed, was given to the jury Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock.

At 2:30 the jury announced that a verdict had been arrived at and reported to the court that a judgment for the plaintiff had been awarded in the sum of $1,710. The amount sued for was $6,000. An interesting point in the trial was that the company rested its case without presenting their witnesses and relied upon the story told by the plaintiff's witnesses to relieve them of any blame in the deaths of the two girls. They contended the crossing was known to be a dangerous one, that the view was unobstructed and that had the Hartings sisters taken the ordinary precaution to 'stop, look and listen,' they would not have been struck by the locomotive.

As will be remembered by our readers, the two girls were standing on the east bound track, waiting for a west bound train to pass and failed to notice the approach of the rapidly moving east bound train. They were struck by the locomotive and hurled a considerable distance, producing instant death.—Delphos Courant.

Carrie and Anna Hartings were daughters of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Hartings, of Chickasaw, and were employed as domestics at Delphos at the time they were killed. They were well known in and about Chickasaw. Attorney J. W. Lorce of this city was counsel for the administrator.
