THE MARION FAMILY THEATER

MILITARY THE MUSICIAN

In 'A Vision of Patriotism' One of the Greatest Single Musical Acts Now Before the American Public.

A bill that is truly worthy of a large audience at each presentation is the all star program that is being presented at the Marion Family theater this week. The vaudeville critic who has attended every production in Marion as well as many in the larger cities will unhesitatingly declare that it is one of the finest aggregations of vaudeville performers that ever performed on a vaudeville stage. Probably the feature act of the bill is the last one—Act F—Demonic and Belle, comedy singers, dancers and acrobats. This pair introduced clever tumbling stunts, cornet music with hokey dancing. It made a decided hit with the audiences which crowded the theater last night.

The Axetelli, a middle aged man and small boy, present a program of novelty, acrobatic work, the like of which was never before seen by many of Marion's most enthusiastic theater goers. The act in which Goforth and Doyle do a series of singing and dancing stunts as well as introducing a number of "funny" jokes is so silly that it becomes humorous and the audience was aroused to uproarious laughter. "Militian", the clever drummer who claims to have been a drummer boy at the Battle of Shilo in the Civil war, introduced a number of fine musical numbers. The closing number of the program, the moving picture was exceptionally fine presenting a variety of comedy and melo-dramatic scenes.

DISARMAMENT WILL BE THE BONE OF CONTENTION

Professor De Martens Who is Canvassing the Sentiment of the Powers Believes Limitation of Fighting Strength will Come up at the Next Hague Conference.

London, Feb. 12.—Professor De Martens, who has arrived here in pursuance of his mission to canvass the sentiment of the powers relative to the program of the coming session of The Hague conference, held a lengthy conference yesterday with Sir Edward Grey, the British foreign secretary. This will be followed later in the week by conferences with Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman and it is expected also with Mr. Reid, the American ambassador, with the latter of whom Professor De Martens will further discuss the intentions of the United States in relation to The Hague tribunal.

London, Feb. 12.—Professor De Martens, who has arrived here in pursuance of his mission to canvass the sentiment of the powers relative to the program of the coming session of The Hague conference, held a lengthy conference yesterday with Sir Edward Grey, the British foreign secretary. This will be followed later in the week by conferences with Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman and it is expected also with Mr. Reid, the American ambassador, with the latter of whom Professor De Martens will further discuss the intentions of the United States in relation to The Hague tribunal.

"Personally, my feeling is that the matter is not yet ripe for discussion, and I am quite convinced that at the present moment it will be quite impossible to attain any practical result from its discussion."

"With regard to the results of my mission so far, I may say that Germany, France and Russia, all hold that the question of disarmament is not yet ripe for discussion and further that the limitation of armaments, not being a practical question, no good can come from discussing it; but this opposition is on the merits of the question and does not go to the extent of opposing any consideration of the subject if the United States or Great Britain insist upon such consideration."

"The United States has reserved the right of placing the question of disarmament before the conference, but I have not heard what has decided to do this or whether the Washington government."

Turning to the question of the Drago doctrine, Professor De Martens said: "This matter has provoked some misunderstanding and bad feeling. If the doctrine is to form a guarantee to any power not to pay its debts, naturally it will not evoke very much sympathy and from this point of view I do not think it will be approved even in the United States. The doctrine was accepted by Mr. Hay, the late American secretary of state, with considerable reserve."

"If, on the other hand, the doctrine will have the effect of referring to The Hague, instead of causing a resort to force, questions which can be settled by arbitration it can only be very useful."

Knitter's Romance. Romance may certainly figure in many of the knitted waistcoats and gorgeous stockings worn by our undergraduates to-day, but these have not so romantic an origin as the first of these articles produced in this country, says the London Chronicle. For tradition has it that William Lee, who in the sixteenth century invented the knitting frame on which both stockings and waistcoats were produced mechanically, was driven to this piece of ingenuity by the cruel flogging of the lady he loved, who happened to be a stocking knitter.

Enraged at his failure to make an impression on her heart, he sought to make it on her purse by killing her means of livelihood, and one is glad to read that all stocking makers combined to frustrate his cruel purpose, with the result that he died with his invention to himself, where he finally died of a broken heart. Whether or not Lee of his day was the originator of the modern tradition of the

GIFT FROM A QUEEN

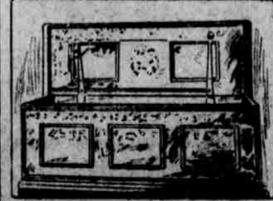

HISTORIC HEIRLOOM THAT IS HIGHLY PRIZED.

"Great Willoughby Chest" Presented by Elizabeth to Second Cousin—Who Shared Her Captivity in the Tower of London.

Boston.—If the "great Willoughby chest," a priceless heirloom in the possession of Theodore Raymond of Springfield, Mass., could talk, what tales it might tell of the captivity of Princess Elizabeth, afterward the "Good Queen Bess" of England, in the Tower of London, a captivity shared by her devoted maid of honor, and second cousin once removed, Lady Margaret Willoughby, through whom this chest, undoubtedly a gift from Queen Elizabeth, passed to her descendants, the Raymonds of New England. And what joy it would bring to the Raymonds, the Lynnes, the Griswolds and other families of Massachusetts and Connecticut in establishing their direct descent from the beautiful Elizabeth Woodville, who became the wife of King Edward IV. These families trace their genealogy back to the kings of England with only one slight break.

Other precious relics of Queen Elizabeth were handed down with the chest, including a tablecloth embroidered by the princess during her imprisonment in the tower, another gift to the faithful Lady Margaret.

The chest is a massive affair, seven feet in length, two feet seven inches in width and two feet seven inches high. It is made of a peculiar hard wood, originally very light in color, but darkened exceedingly by age. The quaint old carvings on the front and on the inside of the cover, the hand-wrought massive iron hinges and handles, the cumbersome lock and huge keys are eloquent testimony of its age. The carvings on the outside, which are nearly worn off, evidently represent horsemen riding through a forest. At either end of the three front panels is a galleon of the Elizabethan period, long-haired, plume-hatted and a mass of ruffs and laces from neck to knees. The carvings on the inner side of the lid represent two scenes, one of Sir Walter Raleigh spreading his cloak before Queen Elizabeth, the other of a gay pleasure party in boats among small islands with a turreted castle in the background. Between the two scenes is a coat-of-arms. The shield has either a cross or lilies to make four quarterings.

The tradition that this chest, with the tablecloth embroidered in the tower and other valuable gifts, was given by Queen Elizabeth to Lady Margaret Willoughby is so well authenticated as to seem beyond dispute. At any rate the tablecloth came down through the Willoughbys to the Raymonds with the chest, and the cloth, at least, was the gift of the queen to Lady Margaret, for English history is clear on this point.

The Raymonds, Lynnes and Griswolds of New England, numbering now several thousands trace their ancestry back to Col. William Willoughby, who was commissioner of the British navy from 1648 to 1651, when he died. His son, Francis Willoughby, came to New England in 1638, and returned to England in 1651. In 1652 he was appointed successor of his father as commissioner of the navy, and in 1658 was chosen member of parliament for Portsmouth. In 1662 he returned to New England, and became deputy governor of the Massachusetts colony in 1665, continuing in office until he died in 1675.

The first of the Raymonds to visit the colonies was William, who came over from Kent "with other stewards and 40 servants" for the "Company of Laconia," formed to trade and fish on the great given to Capt. John Mason, a London merchant, comprising part of what is now New Hampshire. He came to Little Harbor (now Portsmouth, N. H.), in 1630, and remained but a short time.

The first real settler and head of one of the most prolific branches of the family in New England was Richard Raymond, who in 1636 received a grant of land on what is now Winter Island in Salem harbor. He is described in the records as a mariner and part owner of the ketch Hopewell of Salem. He afterward removed to Norwich, Conn., and in 1684 to Sards-brook, where he was engaged in trade with the English and Dutch settlers on Manhattan.

The great chest, which had come into the Raymond family by marriage with the Willoughbys, was brought from Block Island to New London in 1704 by Mrs. Mercy Raymond, widow of Joshua, who was a grandson of Richard. It was then known both as the "great Willoughby chest" and as the "Elizabeth chest." From generation to generation it was handed down, and finally was bequeathed to Theodore Raymond of Springfield, the present owner, by his grandfather, Stephen Raymond of Norwich, Conn.

INSISTED ON BEING HANGED. Murderers Who Have Pleaded for Execution of Sentence.

The case of the condemned murderer, who the other day practically sentenced himself by refusing to sign a petition for a reprieve, is not so rare as many people imagine. One famous parallel instance was that of Rev. Mr. Hackman, who shot an actress, Miss Reay, as she was leaving the stage door of Convent Garden theater, and who, although actually offered a commutation, preferred to die upon the gallows in the expiration of his crime.

Only a few weeks back, again, the Ferla papers chronicled the case of a wealthy land owner, who, having shot a servant in a fit of passion, tried him, with himself as judge, and sentenced himself to ten years' solitary confinement in one of his own private dungeons in his own medieval castle in the heart of the Black Forest.

Nine years and some odd months of this punishment he actually endured, his house steward doing him out daily a meager ration of coarse prison fare. Unluckily for him, however, the authorities got to hear of the affair and he was haled before the ordinary tribunal to await his trial in due course.

Another extraordinary case also, curiously enough, of German origin, was that of a sergeant-major of an infantry regiment stationed in Bremen, who a few weeks back sentenced himself to be shot by a squad of his own men. The soldiers thought they were firing blank, but the self-condemned man had surreptitiously removed the harmless cartridges and substituted ball ammunition, so that at his own word of command, "Fire," he fell dead. Finally, it may be mentioned that John Lee, the Habbucombe murderer, who survived three separate attempts to hang him owing to some defect in the machinery of the drop, insisted vehemently that his sentence must be carried out "according to law."

This is, of course, quite contrary to the generally received opinion regarding the case. But the writer was recently assured of its correctness by the convict's own mother, and her assurance is borne out by Rev. John Plin, who was chaplain of Exeter goal at the time.

Said this gentleman the other day: "When the attempt to execute him (Lee) failed, he called out again and again, 'I will be executed.' And when I suggested after the third attempt to take his life that the execution should be postponed, Lee exclaimed, 'Aren't they going to execute me? I will be executed!'"—Pearson's Weekly.

Intelligent Pharmacy. One of the ablest physicians in New York was in financial straits in his young days, and looked long and hard for a job. Finally he was engaged in a small shop in Cherry street, in the midst of sailors' boarding houses "and slich." One night a woman asked for an ounce of some deadly poison "What are you going to do with it?" said the young pharmacist. She replied quickly: "I am going to drink it; I am weary of living; I shall commit suicide." "In that case," she he "I won't sell it to you; you will have to obtain it elsewhere." She laughed. "Oh, do you take me for a fool? If I wanted to kill myself do you suppose I'd tell you? Honestly, I want the medicine for my husband, a longshoreman, who is in great distress." "That's different," said our young friend; "thereupon sold the poison and made her sign for it. As she passed out by the door she yelled in maniac tones: "Ya, ya! I got you that time! I'll be in hell in seven minutes!"

Why He Quit Preaching. I heard a couple of negro women talking on a car in an amusing manner. "Whalabout is yo' son, Albert, now?" asked one. "He's doin' fine," was the reply. "Is he still preachin'?" "No indeed, no indeed; the other day some quit preachin' and he was one of 'em."

Bible in New Language. London.—A polyglot printing house here which published the Lord's prayer in 400 languages has been asked by a missionary in central Africa to print the grammar of a new language he has discovered. The missionary had to draw and send sketches of the letters. The grammar is on the Odendorf system and the missionary intends to teach the natives of the jungle to read and write.
