When the harvest is carefully stowed away for the winter, when the apples are gathered and the nuts are brown, when the elms are at their best and the pumpkins are ripe, when the leaves fall from the trees, covering the ground with splashes of red and gold and brown, there is a little elfin army, that folks know very little about, except when they catch a funny grin, comes sailing on the handles of their brooms, or in their tiny airships, from away up in the sky, down to the earth for its annual celebration and to catch the last breath at the bedside of the dying Indian summer. It is almost dangerous to venture out on that night, for unless one is especially favored by the gods, one's hair is pulled or one's ear is tweaked or something is sure to befall you.

The vigil of Hallowmas or All Saints' day is once more here, bringing with it its superstitions or supernatural influences handed down from pagan times.

Many years ago, Hallowe'en was a day of celebration after a season of plenty. Sacred fires were kindled to the gods of the harvest and on that night friends accepting the hand of lavish hospitality, gathered about the great fire-place to perform harmless rituals and partake of the brown nuts and apples with cheeks turned red. Later it became known as a day when the frank gods celebrated unsummed, and this version is handed down to us today in the schoolboy's tricks. In the northern part of England, it was believed for many years to be a night of mystic enchantment and was devoutly kept with nut-cracking parties. At such times all sorts of good luck games were played, and it was believed, if the future were properly consulted, one's partner in life might be revealed. The least signs were interpreted as omens regarding the future and fortune.

Much of this superstition remains to the present generation merely as fairy lore, but the day offers, especially to the young hostess, an opportunity for festivities of an informal nature that cause great enjoyment. So when Hallowe'en is reached on the calendar, my young hostess sends out her prettily tinted notes and decorates her home in pumpkins and corn and adorns her table with Jack-o'-lanterns and black cats and witches, emblematic of ill-luck, except when used on the charmed night.

Again, there is such a diversity of entertainment, that many are tempted to open their doors to the pleasure of the diversions the season affords. One hostess entertained with a luncheon of pretty appointments with red and yellow as the predominating colors. A glass chafron filled with evergreen graced the table center. On the sticks supporting the chafron were tiny witches and owls cut from black paper, while a larger witch stood at one side on guard. Favors were stemmed glasses, dressed up as ghosts. Tiny fairy candles, with yellow crepe paper pumpkin shades were at each place, carrying out the yellow schema prettily.

Jack-o'-lanterns, black cats and black witches offer more suggestions while the menu for evening parties, especially, may be carried out with the seasonable delicacies of Hallowe'en.

The members of the Philod Kel Adolpho Sorority were entertained at the home of Miss Margaret Hanley of Lander street Friday evening. During the business session, several new members were admitted to the Sorority.

Following the business meeting, the guests enjoyed an hour of sociability, and a number of Hallowe'en games were entered into with much pleasure. The next meeting will be held in two weeks, the place of meeting has not as yet been decided upon.

Miss Annabelle Mouser entertained the members of the I. K. F. club delightfully last evening at her home on east Church street. Branches of autumn leaves, pumpkins and other decorations emblematic of Hallowe'en were used effectively about the house. Games and music and club chat were enjoyed till nine o'clock when the hostess invited her guests to the dining room. The table center held a large yellow pumpkin shell filled with fruit. Tiny jack o'lanterns adorned the corners of the table, while the menu offered delicious Hallowe'en delicacies.

Miss Winifred Press was a guest of the club at this time. The next meeting will be held in two weeks. The place has not been decided upon.

Master Robert and Delbert Smith entertained about twenty of their little friends at a masquerade party at their home on Irey avenue. The costumes of the little folks were quite comical. In a guessing contest, who was who, Miss Marie Huggins won the prize.

The B. O. F. girls were hostesses at a progressive dinner party last evening which was given in true fashion.

At half after seven o'clock the members and their gentlemen, assembled at the home of Miss Janet Long on west Columbia street. Here Miss Long and Miss Helen Houghton were the hostesses at the bouillon course which was served at tiny tables throughout the parlors. Dainty tiny fairy candles graced each while tiny pumpkin faces grinned from every available corner. In the bottom of the cups were found tiny prophecies of each guest's future. Miss Ruth Smith, Ruth Emery, Frances Frye, and Mary Lee Conklin were hostesses at the dinner course, which was given at the home of the latter on east Center street. At a large table in the dining room, covers were laid for the twenty guests. A great jack o'lantern wearing a dunce cap adorned the center of the table, while black cats and witches added to the seasonableness of the decorations. Following this course, all repaired to the home of Miss Louise Burgess on John street where salad was served.

Miss Helen Mouser and Miss Burgess were hostesses at this time. Candelabra with yellow shades and bowls of yellow chrysanthemums decorated the table prettily from which was served this course, buffet fashion. From here the company was transferred to the Bush house on east Center street. Here Miss Meta Bush and Miss Ruth McKinnis served the last course buffet fashion from a table holding a great jack o'lantern filled with luscious fruit and covered with amilax.

After refreshments were served here the hostess invited her guests to the dance hall on the third floor where the young people spent the remainder of the evening. Those to enjoy the hallowe'en festivities were: Misses Helen Houghton, Janet Longben, Mary Lee Conklin, Frances Frye, Ruth Emery, Ruth Smith, Helen Mouser, Louise Burgess, Ruth McKinnis, Meta Bush and Rodney Hume, Harry Copeland, Fred Taylor, Carl Holley, Clare Davis, Don Bell, Roy Sechrist, Randolph S. Crawley, Frank Foster, and Leo Fisher.

Friday evening, the Gorham home on Greenwood street was the scene of a very pretty gathering when Miss Gorham entertained the members of the N. O. F. club and their friends.

The young people arrived about eight o'clock, the girls masked as witches and the boys as ghosts. When they entered the house, Mrs. Charles W. Petty, attired as Queen of Hallowe'en, ushered them to the third floor, where the only light came from ghostly jack-o'-lanterns, moons and tiny candles. The room was decorated with Pumpkins, corn, black cats and autumn leaves. A fortune telling booth held a place of prominence and was constantly surrounded by the young guests. Carl Longshore presided over a great bowl of cider which was effectively trimmed with autumn leaves. In the contests of the evening prizes were won by Henry Raffensberger, LaVerne Templeton and Grant Mouser. An old-fashioned husking bee completed the round of merry games, and after unmasking, the guests were invited to the downstairs rooms where a three course luncheon was served on tiny tables with miniature Jack-o'-lanterns.

Assisting the hostess in the dining room were: Misses Ruth and Maude Gorham, Dorothy Strelitz and Beulah Spencer. The guests departed at the ghostly hour of twelve, all having highly enjoyed the original and novel entertainment of the evening.

Miss Mabel Helwig, of south Prospect street, entertained a number of young friends at a Hallowe'en party Friday evening. The guests came masked, and in costumes appropriate to the occasion, and were met at the door by a ghost, who ushered them through darkened rooms, to the parlors which were decorated in autumn leaves, bitter-sweet, corn and other tokens of the season of the year. The evening was spent in playing games peculiar to Hallowe'en festivities, and in toasting marshmallows before an open grate. In a contest held, Miss Maybell Whiting captured the first prize, which was a beautiful potted plant, while Miss Mabel Straw won the consolation, a miniature ghost.

At 10 o'clock, lunch was served in the dining-room where the prevailing decorations were carried out.

Master William Coler was pleasantly surprised last evening when a number of his school friends called upon him unexpectedly at his Blain avenue home.

After the surprise greetings were expressed the young people enjoyed various games and diversions. At 9 o'clock the kitchen was merely invaded and an old-fashioned taffy pulling occupied the remainder of the evening.

Those present were: Misses Ethel Lenz, Ruth Myers, Margaret Ebrel, Grace Manahan, Helen Weber, Wilhelmina Rechtel, Florence Wyckoff, Alice Boulton and Marvin Evans, John McLadden, Leon Boulton, Albert Rechtel, George Blaud, Mildred Sweeney, Bud Cole, Bernelda Coler and William Coler.

Friday evening, Miss Juanita Fetter entertained a number of friends at her east Center street home. The evening was passed in playing games and music, and at 10 o'clock the hostess served lunch in the dining-room which was prettily decorated with pumpkins, faces, candles and autumn leaves. A marshmallow toast was the principal feature of the evening. Those present were: Misses Lucile Creasap, Marian Templeton, Marian McCullom, Esther Schoenberger, Josephine McKinstry, Eloise Shannon, Gladys King, Messrs. Rite Taylor, Burdette Bindley, Leon Gill, Mel-borun Baldwin, Charles Lucas, John Creasap, William Fries and Tracy Burke.

A party of young people celebrated All Saints day last evening with a progressive dinner party that uniquely afforded a great deal of pleasure. Misses Gentive Sullivan, Mary McFarland, Alice Mortal and Catherine Von Kaebel were hostesses at the bouillon course at the home of the latter on east Center street. After having long over this delicious dinner which was served at tables artistically with Hallowe'en decorations, the young people repaired to the Griffin home on Oak street where an elegant dinner course was served. Here Misses Griffin, Bethel Griffin, Elinore Donivan, Josephine Donavan served the refreshments. The home of Miss Marie Burke on Lader street was next sought, Miss Burke and Miss Marcella Dunn presided at the third course. The last was served by Misses Rose O'Donnell and Mable O'Rafferty at the home of the latter on Silver street, followed by a delightful social time spent with various diversions suggestive of the season.

Guests of the hostesses were: Oswald Schmause, John Navin, Carl Tobin, Joseph Kauf, Francis Millar, Edwin Dee, Pat Kelly, Lee Andrew Schuler, Harold O'Connell, Charles McCleary, John Murphy and William Landy.

Master Harold Eymon entertained the members of his Y. S. club last evening at his home on east Center street.

The boys spent the early evening hours pleasantly with games dear to the hearts of boys and at nine o'clock the kitchen was merely invaded and an old-fashioned taffy pulling occupied the remainder of the evening.

The time for the next meeting has not been decided upon.

For the pleasure of her little daughter Martha, Mrs. Curtis Morrow entertained a few of the little folk last evening between the hours of five and eight at her home on John street.

The entire basement of the house was decorated for this occasion. Paper lanterns in bright Japanese designs were suspended from the rafters and lighted the rooms prettily, while great jack o'lanterns grinned mischievously from wall niches and tables. Many games were devised by the hostess for diversions. A string of red checked apples, suspended from the ceiling were dived for with more or less success by the little merry makers. At six places were found at tiny tables lighted by fairy tables wearing fluffy skirts of yellow, trimmed with borders of black cats and pumpkins. A delicious Hallowe'en dinner was served. Covers were laid for Misses Helen Brown, Virginia Holland, Marian Burgess, Mary Von Kaebel, Marjey Eymon and Martha Morrow.

BUSINESS OF THE EXPRESS

Companies At a Standstill Today In New York City

By United Press Wire. New York, Oct. 29.—The business of the United States, Wells Fargo and Adams Express companies is practically at a standstill today. All of the terminals in New York, Jersey City and Hoboken are stacked with undelivered packages. Long trains of cars jam the sidings leading into the depots, filled with goods, much of it perishable and waiting to be unloaded. Strikers and strikebreakers are fighting in the vicinity of every terminal and the police of the three cities, armed with riot sticks, are at their wits end to maintain peace. Up to the present time, however, no one has been fatally hurt.

The strike which originated when the officials of the United States Express company refused to pay the wagon helpers five dollars a month more has spread now until every express company in this vicinity is more or less affected. The strike feeling is growing and the union leaders say today that unless the companies speedily consent to their demands they will spread the strike into every city in the United States where the teamsters and their helpers are organized.

The teamsters as an organization are not on a strike. The members have simply refused to take their wagons out with strike-breakers on the ground that the latter are not only inexperienced but that they do not know who they are. Inasmuch as the drivers are held responsible for the safe delivery of all express matter they say they can not work with men they know nothing about. So despite the fact that the drivers claim they are not on a strike they at least are not working.

The Federation of Labor and the Civic Federation are trying to settle the strike and John Mitchell, chairman of the federation arranged today to meet Frank H. Platt, of the United States Express company, next Monday in the hope of arranging a settlement. Some of the express company officials said today they were willing to grant the wage increase but must refuse to recognize the union. There was continued rioting in Jersey City but the outbreaks were confined for the most part to free-for-all fights.

A GREAT RACE

pole that the pole was broken completely in two. His machine completely wrecked. Le Blanc, however, succeeded in throwing himself from the vehicle before he struck the telegraph pole and escaped with a bad cut over the eye.

Le Blanc's injuries were dressed at the emergency field hospital which has been maintained inside of the club house enclosure.

Just how unfortunate the accident was to the clever Frenchman's hopes of annexing the trophy was shown by the announcement that his average speed for the time he was in the air was 64 8-10 miles an hour.

Injuries Reported Serious.—It was rumored about the field that Le Blanc was much more seriously hurt than was at first announced and that he may have received internal injuries. A hurry call for surgeons was quietly circulated through the crowd.

It was officially announced that Grahame-White's average for the 100 kilometers was at the rate of 60.03 miles an hour.

While making his thirteenth lap, Ogilvie was forced to land between pylons nine and ten. While making his nineteenth lap, Le Blanc came down with a rush just outside the course. This practically puts Le Blanc out of the race, as he could hardly reascend in time to beat Grahame-White's time.

Le Blanc was injured by his descent. His face was badly cut and in apparently semi-conscious condition he was placed in an automobile and rushed to a hospital.

Only Ten Laps.—Lieutenant Latham, in his 100-horse power Antoinette, completed ten laps, half of the course in 34:31:20. This was much slower time than was made by Grahame-White for the same distance.

Too Much Wind.—Shortly after Latham's mishap the wind freshened and at 2 o'clock it was blowing too strongly for any of the remaining contestants to take a chance in the air.
