with sprigs of holly, are arranged in rows about the window. Tiny red bells dot the white with glowing color, and dainty pink, blue and white party slippers are hung in the hoops. On the floor of the window are arranged various styles of shoes and garters.

The Manhattan presents a pleasing appearance in its decoration of the Christmas red and green, as does also Schwartz's Underselling Store. Both stores are having sales of men's wearing apparel, and present an opportunity of bargains to the Christmas shopper.

The Hosiery store windows are particularly pleasing with their background of white, over which is scattered in studied disarray branches and sprigs of holly. The shoes and garters line the walls and are carefully arranged on the floors of the windows.

decorations are beautiful, and will prove a great inspiration to the tired shopper who finds it so hard to think what to buy for the long list of friends and acquaintances.

Strayer's drug store is also wearing its Christmas dress of holly festoons and Christmas bells. The shelves are draped with green and red crepe paper, and the windows hold a very pleasing array of dresser sets, combs, brushes, pocket-books, etc.

Schaffner's furniture store presents an unlimited, never-failing supply of ever-useful and beautiful gifts. Tabourettes in elegantly grained woods, buffets in golden oak, early English and mahogany, with china closets to match, finely upholstered lounges, davenports, book-cases, etc., in fact everything which a furniture store can offer is to be found at the Dependable Furniture Store.

Almost everyone pauses a moment before the windows of Nelson's jewelry store, with cleverly arranged electric bulbs, the display of diamonds in rings, brooches and pins, the prettily engraved bracelets and lockets set with stones of great brilliancy and luster, watches and necklaces, the whole display is so dazlingly beautiful that it immediately attracts and holds the admiration of every passer. An extensive line of silverware, including souvenir spoons, meat forks, knives and fancy spoons, also provides a list of gifts.

"The Ark," crowded with shoppers, is dominant with the spirit of Christmas. Great wreaths and garlands of holly paper hung with large and small crimson bells, are draped from the chandeliers and corners of the room. The counters fairly overflow with toys, dolls, books, jewelry and almost every conceivable form of Christmas gift. The windows are decorated with holly, and one shows a Christmas tree in all the holiday trimmings of the tinsel and gilt, with dozens of tiny candles lighting it.

Furniture Makes Fine Gift.

"I've been wanting the dining-room set for a long time," says the matron whose interest centers in her home and the making of it beautiful, "but I'm just waiting for Christmas." Furniture has become greatly favored for gifts and a desk for the daughter's room or a great leather chair for father not only pleases the recipient but benefits the entire home. The Hoover-Howlands company have taken these things into consideration in purchasing their Christmas stock and are prepared for every demand in the furniture line. An array of pleasing pianos are placed in the window which has been enlarged, in space, for the display. Holly forms a pretty background for desks and chairs, rockers, buffets, lamps of handsome designs, china, cabinets, dinner service, stoves, pictures, and great variety of furniture within the store. This firm some time ago displayed one of the handsomest brass beds ever seen in this city and it has been a special ambition and object to furnish the patrons with the best possible quality. A line of unique Roman chairs are among the offerings.

You have only to walk by the windows of the Kleinmaier store to know what they are featuring in Christmas stocks, for the vast display space is filled with the articles that bespeak the interior of the store. These windows are always attractive, but now they are unusually so, with evergreens and holly. Festoons of green paper mache, red bells and holly form the interior decorations of the first floor. Here are a great line of popular priced articles. Toilet sets, fancy and silk hose, silk, madras and percale shirts. The rings, military brushes, gloves, hats, bathrobes, and clothing. Then the shoe department has some especially attractive offers in fine shoes and slippers, the Regal brand for men and the Sorosis for women. The second floor is attractive with oak leaves and poinsettias and on this floor is everything in the way of clothing for boys. The third floor has overcoats and a Christmas line of slip on rain coats.

Smiley's news store is an excellent place to procure candy, cigars, pipes and smoking sets, stationery and books. One of the most appreciable of smaller gifts is a current magazine for the year. These orders are taken at this store for all of the best periodicals. This is an artistic little store and it has been made unusually so with well chosen decorations.

Santa Claus Shop for Young.

The Harry Ammon hardware store is wonderfully bright and cheerful. It makes you think at first of a great big kitchen with pans of brightest tin and aluminum ware were mirrored in grotesque contortion the articles and folks about. Christmas bells and the holiday suggestion. Everywhere are the Christmas offerings. There is a large line of skates, sleds, knives, air rifles, the many things, in fact, that the young and sturdy generation first looks for in the capacious stocking. Nickel ware is featured in a handsome line, while other articles of stock offer suggestions for substantial gifts.

The Marion Clothing and Clock company has a pretty attractive room with excellent and pleasing service. This firm features ladies ready made clothing and for such articles no better place can be found for Christmas shopping. Hats and coats, suits and gay silk petticoats, all so appropriate for the substantial gifts, are attracting many shoppers.

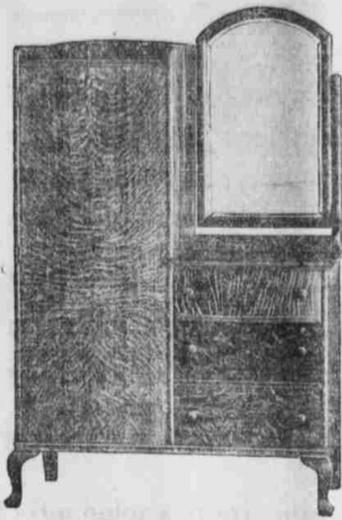

F. D. Bent's plumbing and repairing shop has for the inspection of the Christmas shopper, a complete line of candelabra, colored domes, library lamps, hall shades, and fancy lamps, which brighten a living room, or library, or dining-room wonderfully. They also have on sale motor-cycles and bicycles, graphophone records, and what is somewhat new, cabinets for graphophone records. These cabinets are made on the order of common music cabinets with the exception that the shelves are deeper, and are fitted with slots for the purpose of holding the records safely.

Buehler Bros' meat market has been enhanced by a decoration of holly paper and Christmas bells, and with its snowy walls and trimly kept counters, presents a very attractive, inviting appearance.

The Peter's piano store on north State street is an ideal place for the purchase of Christmas gifts. The new Schaefer player-pianos, the Schumann, and many other good makes,
