HEART AND HOME TALKS

BY BARBARA BOYD

An Unwise Way to Choose Friends.

YOU know the woman who catalogues you, the minute you lay eyes on her. She is the one whom you can hear saying mentally, as she lets her glance run coldly and critically over your hat, "That's only a six dollar willow plume," who takes a second keen look at your collar, to see if it is real Irish or imitation; who decides about how much your fur coat cost; and who, by the time her eyes reach your shoes, has added you up, labeled you, and put you away in a corner of her brain for future use. And when she has need to think of you for social or other purposes, she brings you out of this niche, looks at the label she has affixed, and decides by it whether you are worth knowing or not.

The woman who catalogues is everywhere. Almost every social circle knows her, and endures her, perhaps. The clever woman laughs at her. The shy woman shrinks under her glance. The average woman is indifferent to her. For the fact of the matter is, the woman who thus catalogues others does not gain anything worth having by the transaction. Rather, she is apt to lose. For the knowledge she gains in this way is of little value, and her action is likely to arouse antipathy in those she thus plunders with her eyes. So it is not a profitable proceeding.

For the question as to whether a woman is a desirable acquaintance or not, is not determined by the cost of her willow plume, nor the richness of her fur coat. And the women who make acquaintances on this foundation are not going to secure thereby the truest joys of friendship. The woman who is dressed the simplest has often the real worth of character that makes for joy in companionship. And as for the woman herself who catalogues, she shows by her action some lack in her own character. And thus women with deeper, fuller natures are not attracted to her. And she loses on both ends.

So it will be seen, that the cataloguing process is not the best way when making new acquaintances to discover those from whose intimacy will come the truest pleasure. Study the face that is under the hat, and see if kindness and sunniness and a sense of humor lurk there. Try to discover the qualities of the heart that is beating beneath the fur coat. These are the things to look for if a woman wants the truest and deepest satisfaction from new-found acquaintances. If the cataloguing spirit is creeping into character, or has already secured a foothold there, crush it out at once. It is a quality not to be desired. Its fruit is hard and bitter and unloving. It is neither pleasant nor nourishing. The women who commercially catalogues others, and chooses her friends by the result of this scrutiny, will find she has few friends that add anything of real value to her life.

TRAGEDY

Mass and Woman Confessed. The man and woman started first toward the American shore, but they were stopped by a line of open water. Back they ran again toward the Canadian side, turned around, and made for the American side. When hardly more than 50 yards from the rocky shore the woman fell on her face, utterly spent. "I can't go on; I can't go on," cried wailing. "Let us die here." And all the time the great field of ice, driven onward by a southwest gale, and pressed by a jam broken free from its anchorage near the base of the Horse Shoe Fall, went on

TAILORED WAISTS THINGS THIS YEAR

Now matter how rich and handsome the winter wearables have been, it is always a joy to cast them aside in favor of sheer, fresh summery belongings; and the instant furs are laid aside— and frequently before that—the white spring shirtwaist of lingerie suggestion becomes of vital interest to women, however, have spring shirtwaists been as attractive—or as satisfactory and practical as they are this season.

The semi-tailored models seem to be the favorites. Last year the spring blouse was either elaborately trimmed and shaped, or it was uncompromisingly severe and mannish in type, with a collar that demanded a four-in-hand tie and cuffs that required 168 buttons. This year the tailored waist has taken unto itself a more appealing, feminine air, while its admirable simplicity of line is retained. One of the furnishings referred to is the plaited shirtbosom, which, of course, from masculine garb, but delicately feminine in its new incarnation. Sometimes the shirtbosom is made of finest material than the blouse. A linen blouse may have a bosom of pink plucking, and the bosom, cut in a deep oval shape, is set into the front of the blouse with lace insertion, fancy fagoting, or seam heading. Usually there is a plaited fall down the center of the shirt bosom, or at a little to the left of the center; and it is noted that this year's frills are much more modest and chastened affairs than the exaggerated floppy frills of last season, which must have been a trial to the laundress.

Four of them were arrested in a saloon on North Main street and lodged in the city prison where they were held on suspicion. This morning they were brought before Mayor Walters and ordered out of the city.

It was rumored today that suspicious characters have been seen about the county jail. It is thought that there is a plot on foot to liberate certain prisoners in the jail and a careful surveillance is being kept on the building by the officials.
