

KING GEORGE V IS PROCLAIMED

Ceremony Is Accompanied By Blare Of Trumpets

Signs Of Mourning Absent—Troops Lined The Streets, Bands Played Merry Airs And Populace For Time Being Forgot Their Sorrows In Paying Tribute To New Sovereign—Norray King At Arms Reads Official Document At Three Places In London

London, May 9.—Pursuant to the order adopted by the privy council, King George V was publicly proclaimed in several centers of London this morning. The ancient ceremony dispensed for a brief period the atmosphere of mourning. No symbols of mourning are permitted at the ceremony of the proclamation of a new king. The bands played merry airs, troops lined the streets and there were no bands of crepe on the sleeves of the royal and civil officials participating in the ancient ceremony. The banners hanging from the long trumpets of the heralds bore no bands of crepe.

The first part of the picturesque proclamation ceremony was observed in the Priory court of St. James palace, which is familiar to Americans as the daily scene of changing the guard. At 9 o'clock the earl marshal, the Duke of Norfolk, took his stand on a crimson-draped balcony overlooking the court. He was surrounded by Garter king at arms, Norray king at arms, the York herald, the Somerset herald, the Chester herald, the Pursuivant, rouge dragon, rouge croix and blue mantle, all in gorgeous uniforms. Two of the king's sergeants-at-arms in dark court dress with silver collars, and carrying maces, stood on either side of the earl marshal. The great officers, ambassadors and members of the nobility watched the ceremony from the balcony overlooking the court. Norray king at arms read the proclamation and called "God save the king!" the trumpeters blew a fanfare, the guards' band played the national anthem, the troops presented arms, and king's herald at the Mansion House, the lord mayor called on the populace to sing "God Save the King," and the heralds publicly drank the health of the new sovereign.

BODY TO LIE IN STATE

Funeral Arrangements Entrusted to Officials of Household.

London, May 9.—After the service in the private chapel in Buckingham palace, King George conferred with the officials of the late king's household, to whom he entrusted all the arrangements for the funeral. It seems certain that there will be a ceremonial lying in state extending over several days. It is understood in deciding on this course King George and his advisers were influenced by the certainty that public opinion will demand that some such opportunity be afforded to the masses of the king's subjects to pay the last tribute of respect.

Prior to the final burial in St. George's chapel, Windsor castle, there will be a public lying in state at Westminster hall and a private lying in state at Buckingham palace. The lead coffin will be placed in a casket manufactured of oak grown on the royal estate at Windsor. This will be removed to the throne room of the palace, which will be fitted up as a chapel ardente. A squad of grenadiers will be on duty. Only members of the household and special friends will be admitted. Subsequently the coffin will be removed to Westminster hall, where the body will lie in state in the center of the great hall of the building, most famous in the land for its long historical associations, on a raised dais, surrounded by railings.

The date of the final procession through London to Paddington station, where the coffin will be entombed for Windsor, is not fixed. It will be a pageant of sombre splendor which will recall the memorable procession through London of the remains of the dead king's mother. The actual burial is expected to take place on May 20. The place of interment will be St. George's chapel, Windsor castle. At the conclusion of the funeral services the coffin will be lowered to a vault beneath the chapel. It will subsequently be placed in a tomb beneath the Memorial chapel, in which lie the remains of his majesty's eldest son, the Duke of Clarence.

EXPECT POLITICAL TRUCE

England's Greatest Crisis Delayed by King Edward's Death.

London, May 9.—Politicians admit that there will be a truce between the government and the opposition, not only until after the funeral of King Edward, but until the country recovers from the adverse commercial effects of his sudden death, and that truce, unless events which can not be foreseen now break out, may continue so long that a general election may be staged off until late in the autumn and possibly until the end of the year. Politicians of all parties admit that England can not afford a general election this year, although dramatic political developments may make compromise impossible upon the constitutional question of the lords' veto and precipitate a general election despite the wishes of the masses of the people before King George has time to accustom himself to his new responsibilities. None of the members of the cabinet now in town or hastening to London, and none of the leaders of the Union-

E. P. Weston, Who Made Record Hike From California to New York

Triumphantly walking at a pace which kept men half his age on a dog-trot, Edward Payson Weston, seventy-two years old, completed his record transcontinental hike from Santa Monica, Cal., to New York city in seventy-seven days and twenty-three hours. When he reached New York Weston was greeted by a large crowd of men, women and children, who loudly cheered the aged pedestrian and escorted him to the city hall, where he was met by a committee composed of city officials and well known men prominent in sporting circles. It was arranged to have Mayor Gaynor present a solid gold belt to the long distance walker in appreciation of his wonderful feat; but, owing to urgent official duties, he was unable to make the presentation, and the task was assigned to Patrick Powers, the well known promoter of sports. The aged athlete intimated that he would endeavor to lower his present record in the future, saying that he made a mistake in stopping for banquets and speeches along the route.

ists, Liberal, Labor or Irish parties have yet expressed themselves about the immediately political future.

Laborite Forecasts Policy. Philip Snowden, M. P., a notable Laborite, said in an interview: "We can do nothing at present. We are waiting for the government's long promised measures for social reform. The king's death will delay our demands for at least six months and probably 12 months, but we will insist upon the promises being fulfilled eventually. The Labor party in England had great hopes in King Edward, who knew and understood the English people and anticipated their intentions. King George is an unknown quantity in the situation. Still, so far as the Labor party is concerned, the constitutional struggle will be suspended. We are a democratic party, not republicans. The only question in dispute is the relative powers of the house of commons and the house of lords, but the Laborites do not care to force the issue just now. Probably a year hence this will be the only question the people will be asked to decide at a general election. Owing to the death of the king the veto question will remain in abeyance and the Laborites will be relieved of the accusation of pursuing a do-nothing policy. No member of the Labor party attacks the monarchy. It is improbable that King George will be called on to air the royal prerogative of settling the dispute between the lords and the commons by any action precipitated by the Laborites. In order not to make difficulty for the government we will postpone our efforts to enforce action regarding employment and social insurance."

Known as Queen Mother.

It is stated that in the future Queen Alexandra will choose to be known as the queen mother, a title that has not been used in England since the days of Henrietta Maria, consort of Charles I. The new queen will be known as Queen Mary. This title is taken by the expressed wish of King Edward, who chose it some time ago. It was at first agreed that she would be known by her full name of Victoria Mary, but this was thought to be too cumbersome and the shorter title was chosen. The dowry house of the queen mother will be Marlborough House. It was her first home in London, for she was brought there as a bride in 1863. It is suggested that Sandringham House may be used by the queen mother, although the extensive estate and the shooting may be devised to the Prince of Wales.

YOUNG GIRL KIDNAPED THOUGHT ACT OF GYPSIES

Cleveland, O., May 9.—A gypsy camp near Ashtabula was raided by police looking for 7-year-old Jennie Maunche of Cleveland, who disappeared while at play. They found a girl that answered the description, but she did not seem to understand Italian, the girls' native tongue, and the Ashtabula police, not having any orders to hold anyone, let the girl go. The Cleveland police are at a loss to explain the girl's disappearance, and though the family thinks the gypsies, who were camping near her home at

PROVIDE ISSUE FOR CAMPAIGN

Sundry Civil Bill Has Support Of President

Republican Congressional Committee Will Boost Provision And Cannon Is Reported To Be In Friendly Frame Of Mind—Stand-patters' Objections Answered By Tawney—Democrats Will Line Up In Opposition—Western Candidates Pleased

Washington, May 9.—With the approval of the Taft administration, a law is about to be enacted by congress that will, it is believed, provide an issue on which Republican orators of all complexions may unite in discussing the tariff in the coming campaign. Republican leaders have determined to confer powers upon the existing tariff board that will enable it to make more thorough inquiries into cost of production at home and abroad. Such a provision is contained in the sundry civil bill, which is pending in the house.

President Taft is favorable to the proposal that the powers of the tariff board be enlarged. While Speaker Cannon has made no comment on the subject for publication, it is understood that the provision in the sundry civil bill has his approval. Senator Aldrich will not object, and the officers of the Republican congressional committee, notably Chairman McKinley, who will direct the fight to retain Republican control over the house, has placed his O. K. on the provision.

Some Republican stand-patters will oppose it, particularly Representatives Daizell of Pennsylvania and Fordney of Michigan, members of the ways and means committee. They look on the move to confer additional powers on the tariff board as the entering wedge for a tariff commission which, as proposed by Senator Beveridge of Indiana, would be authorized to make changes in rates in its discretion. To this Representative Tawney of Minnesota, author of the provision broadening the powers of the tariff board, has replied that congress can not delegate the taxing power and that in his opinion no serious effort will be made to create such a commission, inasmuch as it obviously would be unconstitutional. Mr. Tawney declares that it is merely proposed to make the tariff board an agency to secure data in this and other countries in order that future revisions of the tariff may be made in a more scientific manner.

Democrats Against Bill. Representative Champ Clark, the minority leader, has announced that the house Democrats will be united in their opposition to the Tawney proposition. "The Democrats are opposed to it," said Representative Tawney, "because they know that it will afford a means by which Republicans may get together on the tariff."

Republicans from the middle and northwest are very much elated over the Tawney provision. They say that if they can give their constituents assurances that a tariff board is at work collecting data that will enable congress to avoid mistakes in future revisions that are alleged in some quarters to have been made in the recent revision, the way will be made easier for them in this year's campaign. This view is entertained by many Republican leaders, and as the Tawney provision has the support of the president, its advocates have no doubt that it will be enacted. They expect that Mr. Taft will be able to win over to the support of the provision the stand-patters who have announced a purpose to oppose it.

ACCIDENTAL SHOOTING

He cried, "My God, you shot me," and fell dead. Taylor was arrested but later was released on order of the coroner.

LEGISLATURE IS READY FOR THE FINAL GRIND

Columbus, O., May 9.—Senators and representatives are on the ground for the final day's session of the general assembly, which will be held tomorrow. Action will be taken on a number of measures sent to conference before the legislature recessed April 29. A number of bills were left in an uncompleted state, among them the Langdon tax commission bill. All other unfinished business will be closed up and it is expected that the session will last well into the night.

GROGGER IS MURDERED AT SUNDAY PICNIC

Hamilton, O., May 9.—David J. Freeman, 35, of Cincinnati, was murdered and several others slightly hurt in a riot at the end of a picnic given by the Cincinnati Grocers' association at Wooddale park, near this city. The police are holding Robert Edwards, 18, and William Jackson, 16, both of Cincinnati, as the slayers of Freeman. It is charged that the boys lured young George Herby, another picnic visitor, to a secluded spot and attacked him. Herby screamed and assistance reached him, Freeman being killed in the free-for-all fight that followed.
