

MEDITATION OF CHRIST—PRACTICAL TENDENCY OF THE DOCTRINE.

The doctrine may be incomprehensible; while its practical results may be clear and intelligible. We cannot comprehend the union of the divine and human nature in the person of the Mediator; nor the cause why the shedding of his blood should make atonement for sin; nor the mode by which this blood gives efficacy to his intercession. Still we perceive many important practical results of this doctrine of meditation—

- 1. In reference to God, and
2. In reference to man.

1. In reference to God it establishes his authority; it exalts his holiness; it vindicates his justice; it displays his mercy. That authority, the violation of which, in the least degree, with impunity, would weaken the pillars that sustain the moral universe, is now established. Man had assailed this authority. No less reparation is made than the perfect obedience and infinite sufferings of the Son of God.

That holiness, which it would be impious to suppose God could permit to be sullied, is now infinitely exalted. For such is the holy abhorrence which God manifests for sin, that he accepts the services of sinful man only when they are presented through the mediation and urged by the intercession of an almighty Advocate.

That justice, which is firm and immovable, as the everlasting hills, and which is the essential attribute of a righteous Governor of the universe, is now fully vindicated. It had pronounced the penalty. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." (Ezekiel xviii. 4.) and justice exacted the penalty, though the only begotten and well beloved Son of God was the victim.

And yet in this dispensation through a Mediator, the man Christ Jesus, who was the Son of God, the divine attribute of mercy is illustriously displayed. For it is object of that atonement and intercession of the Mediator which God accepts, to extend pardon and all salvation, and everlasting life, to the whole of the guilty race of mankind. "God so loved the world as to give his only-begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but should have everlasting life."—John iii. 16.

The attributes of God are thus established and exhibited through the intervention of a divine Mediator.

The same doctrine has the most important effects—

- 2. In reference to man.

It impresses on him the evil and guilt of sin—it inspires him with hope and confidence—it animates him to the highest acts of obedience.

No picture, even drawn by the pen of inspiration could have so forcibly exhibited the evil and guilt of sin, as that which is afforded in the cross of Christ. A divine personage, in the agony of his spirit, sweating drops of blood; sustaining the most ignominious and aggravated sufferings; sinking in the pangs of a death embittered by the dereliction of those consolations which from all eternity, he had enjoyed. Who can behold the cross, and not shudder at the guilt of his sins?

And yet, who can behold the cross, and not rejoice in the hope of the fitness of pardon?—If God spared not his own Son, at freely gave him up a propitiation for our sins, (Rom. iii. 25.) who can despair of mercy? Here is a confidence, penitent sinner, which will defy all the assaults of the adversary. A fountain is opened for thee, not in the blood of bulls and of goats, but in that blood which cleanseth from all sin. "Wash and be clean." "Though thy sins, be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." 1 John i. 7; Isaiah i. 18.—The Mediator who intercedes for thee, is armed with almighty power, and his intercession is all-prevailing. He bore thy sins, and carried thy sorrows, and thou art sure of his sympathy. His language, now that he is seated on the throne of the universe, is the same, which in infinite compassion he uttered when he wandered without a place to lay his head. "Come unto all ye who labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Matt. xi. 28. "Whosoever cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out." John vi. 37. Oh! what a sure ground of confidence have they who flee for refuge to this hope set before them!

And in the meditation of their Saviour what animating motives do they behold to the highest acts of obedience!

Is not our return due to him who is constantly interceding for them at the right hand of his Father, and who shed his blood of to give efficacy to that intercession; who, "the brightness of the Father's glory," condescended to make himself of no reputation, and to suffer for them the death of the cross, that he might be exalted to be their Prince and Saviour, and by his intercession rescue them from death and condemnation, and reinstate them in his Father's favor, and exalt them to the glories of heaven? Christians your Mediator demands your liveliest affection, for he is your friend and your brother. He claims your homage and obedience for he is your God.

There is but one Mediator between God and men; and he is "the man Jesus Christ." He is also the "King of kings, and Lord of lords." 1. Tim. vi. 15.—And interest in his meditation can alone save any of the guilty race of man from perdition, and exalt them to happiness in the world beyond the grave. This interest is obtained only by a true and living faith—a faith which in regarding him in his office as a prophet, humbly receives his divine instructions and illuminations; which, embracing him as an atoning priest and Intercessor, confides in the merits of his precious blood and intercession; and acknowledging him as a king and ruler, obeys his laws, and submits to his ordinances.—This, then, Christians, should be the subject of your inquiry; it is the object of your solicitude whether you have that true and living faith which interests you in the mediation of the great Intercessor. Delude not yourselves with a superficial, a vague, an inoperative faith. The faith which will justify you by the blood of Christ, must lead you to hold constant communion with the Saviour, and to go unto the Father through him. It must divest you of all self-dependence, of all trust in your righteousness, of all ground of acceptance, and excite you earnestly, steadily, with prayer, with watchfulness, with labor, to follow after that "holiness without which no man can see the Lord;" and to cherish "whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are lovely and of good report." Phillip. iv. 8. If we have not this faith, Christians, rest assured, we are deluding ourselves with a name to live, while we are dead. If we have not this faith we are destitute of an interest in the great Mediator. And what, then, is our situation? Out of Christ, "God is a consuming fire." Heb. xii. 29. Behold, in the glowing description of the prophet, the effects of his indignation—"Tophet is ordained of old—it is prepared for the unbelieving and the ingodly. The breath of the Lord, as a stream of brimstone, doth kindle it." Isaiah xxx. 33. Oh, my soul, is it possible that this may be thy destiny, and canst thou be at ease?—Bp. Hobart.

THE BROKEN HEARTED WIFE AND MOTHER.

A year or two since, as I was passing a Sabbath in a country town, in the interior of the Commonwealth, I was requested to visit a dying woman. The first aspect of the house to which I was led in its loose claphboards and broken windows, and decayed fences, told me I was approaching the home of a drunkard. The apartment in which the dying woman was breathing her last, was one whose aspect of cheerlessness and discomfort made the heart to ache. A few wretched articles of furniture were scattered about the room, and upon a low bed, in one corner, most scanty furnished, lay the wasted form of the dying. Her countenance bore the traces of intelligence, of refinement, and yet of the most overwhelming mental anguish. Her husband stood at the head of the bed, with an expression of as deep grief as could be crowded into the features of a bloated inebriate. Five little children stood around the bed-side, loudly sobbing; and the eldest daughter not twelve years of age, kneeling by her mother's side, and almost convulsively clasping her hand as she droined it with her tears.

It was one of those scenes of woe, which at once paints itself upon the eye, and impresses itself upon the mind never, never to be effaced. From the few almost articulate words of the dying woman, I gathered that all the anguish of the mother's heart was in fevered excitement, as she was to leave her poor children—her tender boys and girls, in the world of temptation, with no guide but their besotted, drunken father. She was already breathing her last as I entered—and, in a short time, her struggling broken, grief-ridden heart, was still in death.

I enquired into the circumstances of the case, and found that a few years before, this woman, then a young lady of many accomplishments of person and of mind, was married to her husband, then a young merchant—amiable, intelligent, of correct habits, and engaged in lucrative and successful business. The sun of present and prospective joy, beamed brightly on the morning of their nuptials. Every thing was cheerful and tasteful in the happy home, where their youthful affections were first cemented. A few years of untroubled prosperity glided swiftly away.

Behind the counter of this young man's store, were ranged several punchcocks of ardent spirits, for retail sale. In selling to others he tested. Gradually he acquired an appetite for strong drink—and the lapse of a very few months scattered all his property, ruined his reputation, beggared his family, and left him a ragged vagabond in the streets. He was naturally an amiable and affectionate man—compliant and yielding, and having in his nature but little of that sterner material which is called decision, when temptation came with its mighty power, he fell at once, and irremediably. With such persons it is not unfrequently the case, that intoxication produces perfect frenzy. A few glasses would perfectly craze him, and he would return at night to his home, a raging, tearing maniac.—He would take the whole range of the house in his fury, and wife and children were compelled to flee, wounded and bleeding, from his terrible violence. The emaciation of utter wretchedness and despair, struck to the mother's heart. Often would she gather her little flock of children in the corner behind her, and receive upon her own person the fearful blows which their brutal and crazed father was dealing around him.

Oh who can tell what days—what nights she spent, Of tedious, waviness, sailless, shoreless woe!

In the morning, this wretched victim of rum would awake from his debauch, and restored to his natural affection, would reflect upon his brutality in the deepest abyss of horror and remorse. He would fall upon his knees before his wife, with tears of anguish rolling down his cheeks, and implore her forgiveness; he would curse the day in which he was born; he would call himself brute and a fiend; he would wish himself dead; he would resolve and re-resolve that he would never drink again. For a few days he would succeed in keeping himself away from temptation. But the acquired appetite would gather strength by the transient restraint. Associates would lure him into the village store; or the sight of the decanters, the fumes of the spirits, the persuasion of tapers would sweep away, with hurricane fury, all his resolutions. One glass would follow another, in the desperation of remorse and despair. Frenzied with the fiend-creating poison, he would return to his home and re-act those scenes of outrage the bare imagination of which makes humanity shudder.

Again and again his wife, in her wretchedness, went to the village groceries, and with all the eloquence of a despairing and broken hearted mother, implored them not to sell her husband rum. She would show them her own wounds; she would lead to them her children, and tell the awful stories of her woes. But all her entreaties were in vain. Sometimes they would refuse to sell to him. But then every toper in the village could get his pint bottle filled, and at the very door of the store, hold the bottle to the mouth of this wretched sor. Drinkards, like misery, love company.—And a toper seems to be always pleased to see his fellow toper drunk. The sale of ardent spirits was free in this village, and of course there was no such thing as keeping it from one who had not mental resolution of his own to resist the temptation.

Misery is a slow and cruel murderer. But he gnawed with vulture tooth at the heart of this much injured woman, till exhausted nature sank and expired. Where that wretched father now is, whether in the grave, the almshouse, or the State Prison, I know not; where those children, those wrecks of a once happy family, now are, I know not; but they are probably scattered as melancholy rains over tempestuous world: the daughters, fondled in the embraces of a faithful mother's love perchance in the ware-houses of infancy, the sons, inheriting their father's appetite, and discouraged by his disgrace, and lured by his example, growing up in shame and poverty, and crime, candidates for highway robbery and midnight arson, and for the pirate's deeds of deadly daring.

Now what, in the light of such facts, shall a wise community do? Shall it decide that the public good demands that this baneful and earthly happiness shall be freely retained. That rum, brandy, gin and whiskey, after all the ruin they have caused, and are still causing, shall yet be sold by the quart the pint, the half pint, the gill, and the glass alluring the young to destruction provoking the appetite for intemperance, and holding out facilities for any poor wretch who has but three cents in the world, to squander it for rum?—Zion's Herald.

Marlborough Academy.

THE exercises of this flourishing Institution will recommence on the second Monday in January next, under the direction of Mr. Charles M. T. McCauley as Principal in the Male, and the Miss Simpson in the Female department. In the Male department a general course of studies will be embraced, calculated to prepare young men for admission into any of the most respectable Colleges. In the female department a thorough course of English studies, embracing a variety of Ornamental branches will be pursued, together with the French, and perhaps other languages if necessary, and music. The scholastic year will embrace two sessions of 22 weeks each. The tuition for each of which will be required in advance; nor will allowance be made for any other than unavoidable withdrawals. The rates of tuition are various according to grade, but perhaps more reasonable than at any other Institution of equal respectability in the state. Whilst Board may be attained in the best houses, Public or Private at from $7 to $10 per month. These literary facilities presented in the Village of Bennettsville, distinguished for health, morality, sociability and refinement, the Board of Trustees confidently deem sufficient to induce extensive patronage. To the surrounding country, to whose liberality and patronage each department of the Institution is already indebted for its commodious structure and eminent respectability the Board think it unnecessary to make an appeal, as readily might they suppose that a luxury when obtained would not be enjoyed; but to those who in absence of such facilities have to seek them abroad, this advertisement is more particularly directed.

JAMES C. THOMAS, Secretary Board Trustees. Bennettsville, S. C. Dec. 20, 1838. The Fayetteville Observer will please insert the above until next February and present its account to B. D. Townsend, Treasurer. 6 8t
