TALKS RATIONALLY; HELD TO BE INSANE

Man Is Convicted of Lunacy in Court; Tells Straight Story.

"Forty years ago, a learned German professor named Leipsig advanced the theory which was generally accepted, that if a person could write or read for 20 minutes on one subject intelligently he must be sane. I can do that and am willing to undergo the test for I am possessed of all my faculties."

This declaration was made to Judge Elyar and a jury in the county court Tuesday afternoon by Jacob B. Carpenter, a 64-year-old machinist arraigned on a charge of insanity.

However, the jury did not consider him sane and ordered him placed in confinement, fearing he might become dangerous.

Mrs. Rena Parry, who conducts a boarding house at 1095 North Florence street testified that the man had come to her home and sought to secure accommodations there, but she was suspicious of him particularly as he seemed anxious to shake hands with her every few seconds. She testified that he had gone to the house and had his breakfast and thanked her for it, but declared he had no money wherewith to pay for it.

Charles Zeiger testified that the man had boarded at his hotel for some time during the winter and he was suspicious of him, particularly as he had a clasp knife with a six inch blade which he would deposit with the clerk and then call for it at frequent intervals. He also testified that the man had eaten there but had failed to pay him. Finally he handed the knife over to the police.

Former chief of detectives Billy Smith testified that he had first been attracted to the man in Juarez, where he was engaged in writing a $100,000 check to bet on the races.

County health officer Hugh White testified that the man's appearance indicated that he was demented with maniacal tendencies and it would be best that he be confined in an institution.

Carpenter himself took the stand and recited his history since he came to El Paso one cold night in November, an hour before midnight. He said that the stories told by the other witnesses would prejudice the jury and did not fully state the facts, for, while they were true to a certain extent, there was more.

He told the story of the knife and declared that at the police station it was returned to him, the sergeant taking it from a drawer; he said it bore the label: "The lunatic's knife."

"There has never been any insanity in my family," he said. "I was born near Philadelphia on May 26, 1846, and have been a machinist for 47 years. My father and mother were second cousins."

When asked what religion he professed, he said: "Well, I might be a protestant, some might say an agnostic, but just put it down Unitarian."

He further declared that he was a member of one of the most prominent families in Chester, Pa. but had not been there for eight years, though he still had cousins residing there and one cousin named Lizzie Carpenter lives at Paris, Pa. though he had heard nothing from her for 16 years.

Twice Carpenter was arrested by the police, who tried to persuade him to leave town, but he would not do so. He came here from Globe, Ariz. having been employed at the Miami mine there, he said.

See How the Clothes Look Before You Buy

DID you ever give your order for a suit, select the cloth, look at a fashion plate and choose a style, and then feel disappointed in it? It was, perhaps, through no fault of the workmanship or the fit, but the general unbecomingness of it.

Now, there's a way to avoid all that. The H. S. & M. and the Kuppenheimer hand tailored suits are cut to fit all sorts of men—tall or short—stout or slim. There are hundreds of styles to choose from—select one—try it on—if it does not look well, reject it—try another style—keep on trying—you'll surely be suited. You can see just how it's going to look. Isn't that more satisfactory than taking a long chance?

Let our clothing salesmen help you to dress well. They can show you the "best clothes on earth" in the season's smartest styles—real hand tailored suits that keep their shape as long as they last. The prices are most reasonable—$20.00, $22.50, $25.00, $27.50 and upward—and every one of them guaranteed by the "Popular."

Less expensive kinds are shown in perfect fitting, well built suits at $12.50, $15.00, $16.50 and $18.50, for men and young fellows.

THE CHORUS LADY

Novelized From Forbes' Play of the Same Name by John W. Harding

She had believed in him unwaveringly during all the years since then, never doubting his loyalty, never believing that he was as other men she saw and ever could or would let his thoughts dwell upon another woman, confident in his love, confident that he would remain true in every sense to the spirit of their troth and await with her the apotheosis of their romance, the supreme reward of their patience, in their union forever. Sure as she was of herself in her love for him, her mind never could have conceived the idea that he would ever seriously harbor the notion that the wealth of another man might hold attraction for her. Although he had intimated at the time of her last visit home that the thought of it worried him, she had dismissed the subject with her playful rejoinder and straightway forgotten it. Now at the first real test he had broken his pact and credited her with baseness of the most ignoble kind.

"I suppose you thought when you got through with him an' he cast you off you'd fall back on me, the patient, good natured fool down in the country who wasn't wise to the sort you've proved to be."

The words whirled in her head. Had Dan really delivered himself of such an infamous utterance to her, his affianced wife, who had borne so much for him? There was no evading the hideous reality of it. He had said it and spurned her ruthlessly. This was the trust of a man! This was the end of her dream of bliss! It was all over, over with everybody. She could not explain to her mother, and the latter would tell her father, and he, too, would shut his heart to her. There was nothing left for her in the world. She had lost all. Distracted by her despair and misery, she ran rather than walked—ran straight before her, and people turned and gazed after her curiously. On she hurried until she brought up exhausted at a line of cars that blocked her way. Scarcely conscious of what she was doing, heedless of where it went, she boarded the car that had stopped in front of her. She wanted only to sit down. There were few people in the car, and she did not look upon them with seeing eyes. The courage, the knowledge of the world, the qualities of pluck and clear judgment that had enabled her to hold her own in all circumstances had deserted her utterly for the time being in her wretchedness. Her nerve was gone. The blow was too much even for such a brave little woman to bear up under. "South ferry! All out!" shouted the conductor.

Mechanically she descended from the car and walked slowly over to Battery park. The solitude of the place at that hour appealed to her. She wanted to get away from the noise, the lights, the people. But from the lights she could not escape. They were everywhere. They piled in mountains all about her. They cast long golden sheens from the passing ferryboats. Their gayety seemed to mock her. She walked toward the water front, and a policeman, twirling his night stick, advanced upon her out of the shadow.

"Hi!" he shouted gruffly. "Where are you goin'? What d'you want?"

His rude tones startled her and recalled her to herself.

"I'm going to the subway," she answered at a venture.

"Well, that ain't the way to the subway you want, an' you know it," he replied. "Get out of it, an' if I find you around here again tonight I'll run you in, see?"

Greatly frightened, she retraced her steps, walking hurriedly.

As she neared the car tracks a man who had followed her at a distance from the time she had left the car accosted her.

"Excuse me, Miss Patsy," he said, raising his hat. "Are you ill? As anything appened? Can I 'elp you?"

Surprised, she looked at him, but failed to recognize him.

"How'd you know my name? I don't know you," she answered.
