SPECTACULAR SPOKANE Where Everything is Large, Different and Delightful.

(By G. A. Martin.) Spokane, Wash., Oct. 18.—"A great big potato, 10 cents. A great big red apple, 10 cents." So reads every bill of fare in this northwestern country and the statement is literally true. This is a country of great things, of great big people, and it takes great big vegetables and fruit to satisfy them. "A great big potato" in Washington is a potato that makes a meal; and it is such a meal as one seldom enjoys. The meat is meaty enough to delight the heart of an Irishman and the flavor is past description. Baked to a beautiful brown, the top slit and filled with butter, if anybody would ask for a more appetizing article of food than "the great big potatoes" that grow in Washington, Idaho and Montana, he is hard to please.

milks on the family dozerette one year and building a skyscraper downtown with his name in gilt letters over the elevator entrance the next. Men risk big things and they win big stakes. New towns are put onto the map in a day and they grow to become cities in a few months. Suburban additions are cut out of the mountainside one week and almost in the next they are putting down sewers and building a new park or school house to accommodate the children. It is good to see them grow. Their enthusiasm is genuine; none of it is assumed or perfunctory. They believe in themselves and they make the country believe in them. It was this spirit that made possible the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition and the great Portland fair; it was this spirit that made the seventeenth National Irrigation congress one of the greatest in its history and it was this spirit that has put so much enthusiasm into the International Dry Farming congress at Spokane. It is the spirit that is making the west the real United States. It is a spirit that we have in the southwest as well as the northwest.

ber of commerce register as declaring that they have never seen residences as picturesque as in Spokane, the metropolis of the inland empire, not even in Switzerland. Former El Pasoans There. Many former El Pasoans are up in this region. One meets them on every hand. Fred McKeen, formerly in the immigration service there, is located here now, and O. P. Nation, former editor of an Alamogordo paper, is located here representing a type foundry. He wanted to be remembered to "Bill" Elison and others of El Paso. A. E. Koehler, former editor of the Hearst papers and wanted to be remembered to Charlie Brann of The Herald staff; Felix Martinez and other El Paso people, had the pleasure of meeting a former school teacher who taught me in the seventh grade in San Antonio and who in later years visited often at Cloudcroft and is well known to many El Paso teachers. She was Miss Fannie Burnett, but now she is Mrs. S. C. Cronick, wife of a well known contractor and property owner here.

Believes in Advertising. Spokane certainly appreciates the value of advertising and is said to have the best organized publicity bureau in the country. Frederick Wolf is at its head and directs a large corps of writers and clerks. The newspapers are good boosters—there are five dailies here—and the business men laid great stress on the success of the congress and the large part the papers played. To show their appreciation of the work of the visitors, the local people gave many affairs in honor of the "press boys." One night with their wives, they were all the guests of the state fair and at 12 o'clock the men were given a smoker and vaudeville entertainment at the chamber of commerce rink. Next night the men were taken over into the Idaho forests and treated to a dinner of game and fish, while their wives and sweethearts were banqueted at Davenport's cafe and taken to the theater. The officials of the congress were entertained just as elaborately and were banqueted twice and given a luncheon one. Spokane is not small.

Beauties of Spokane. Spokane probably has some of the prettiest yards in the whole United States. Many of the things that have been accomplished here to beautify the city are possible for El Paso. The park system on the sides of the streets that El Paso has taken up, has great vogue here. The terrace system is also greatly in favor in this city, and one of the prettiest effects on the hillsides is the double system of streets in many places. Where it was found necessary to build one house above another, the house on top is fronted on a street probably 15 to 20 feet higher than the house that faces it below. The houses face each other on any other street, but one-half of the street is several feet below the other, with a rock wall dividing the two, steps leading up and down at places and vines covering the wall. The effect is most beautiful. No regard is taken for the direction of streets in the residence sections where the hills predominate. Streets curve and crook in all directions and the effect is most striking. It would never do for a business section, but this hill section compares to El Paso's Highland Park and Mesa region, safely without the pale of the business section now and forever. Parks are a very important part of the beautification system of the city of Spokane. Every place where a new addition is laid out, a park is located. There are menageries in many of them, but artistic arrangement of flowers and shrubs and trees in all. The town has the advantage, however, that it has the trees here to begin with, for the scenery in the suburbs is an exact duplicate of that of Cloudcroft. Tall pines, quaking aspens, wild strawberries and other plants that make Cloudcroft and the Sacramentos so beautiful, grow on the hills about Spokane and many owners of residences have utilized to excellent advantage what nature had already given them when they began their work of beautification.

Houses of Different Designs. One of the very noticeable features of residential Spokane is the dissimilarity in designs of houses. Everybody has a house different from his neighbor and the bungalow and mission predominate. Many English types are also seen. Some of the older large residences present scenes in the arrangement of grounds and often in the design of the building that are reminiscent of the chateaus of France and the ancient cities of England. Many travelers are on record in the chamber of commerce.

Constipation "For over nine years I suffered with chronic constipation and during this time I had to take an injection of warm water once every 24 hours before I could have an action on my bowels. Happily I tried Cascara, and today I am a well man. During the nine years before I used Cascara I suffered with indigestion, nervousness, and a general feeling of depression. Thanks to you, I am free from all that this morning. You can see in this behalf of suffering humanity. E. F. Fisher, Resnoke, Ill.

Electropodes For Rheumatism and Nervousness Remove the Cause Rheumatism, Nervousness and all kindred complaints are the result of excess uric acid in the system. The only remedy is to remove the cause. Electropodes will do it. They eliminate, through the large pores of the feet, all poisons and impurities from the entire system, strengthen the nerves, promote circulation and aid each organ to perform its functions properly.
