EL PASO TELLS OF FIGHTING IN MEXICO

kilometers out of San Andreas and the engineer badly injured. Conductor Weber also had his ankle badly sprained, but no passengers were killed, although there were 122 on board the train returning from Chihuahua.

The insurgents rode into Minaca late Monday evening, he says, and ransacked the stores taking all of the arms, ammunition and supplies they could find.

Jeje a Prisoner.

Fighting also occurred at Guerrero, Temosachic and other small towns west of Chihuahua, according to Sharpe. At Guerrero the jeje was taken a prisoner, he says, and was to have been held to exchange for insurgent prisoners.

A relief train was sent out Tuesday morning from Chihuahua to pick up the passengers who had been in the wreck near San Andreas and they were taken to Chihuahua in time to connect with the train for the north.

An Eyewitness.

Discussing the affair, Sharpe said: "The wreck was caused by two rails having been taken up and removed by a party of revolutionists, at least 500 strong, well mounted, armed with sixshooters and new 30-30 rifles. Each man had two belts of pistol cartridges and a bandolier hung over his shoulder containing rifle cartridges. The engineer and firemen were badly hurt and the conductor had a broken nose. The insurgents surrounded the train and held all the passengers up, took all the arms and cartridges from the Mexicans and all the cartridges from the Americans, but not their arms."

Questioned American.

"They asked me what my business was and whether I owned any land down there. I told them I did not, but lived in El Paso. They then told me to go back to El Paso and stay there, as they had nothing against Americans and did not want to interfere with them. I asked permission from the chief of the band to send a telegram to Chihuahua regarding my business and my cattle business. The chief then dictated a telegram for me to send as follows: 'Send train immediately for baggage and passengers.' I was then ordered to cut the wires, which I did about to when the chief changed his mind, and said: 'Let them send all the soldiers they want to, as we are ready for them.'

A Second Wreck.

"Four days afterward a train going west from Chihuahua was wrecked at the same place. On this train were a number of rurales and some passengers. The insurgents fired into the train from ambush and killed three Mexicans, including a number more and also killed three women and one child among the passengers. They went through this train, taking all arms and ammunition, and took all the money from the Mexicans, securing possession of a rich Mexican and various sums from the others, saying, 'We need money.'

Capture a Town.

"They took possession of San Andreas and other small officials in all the offices from jeje politico, including postmaster.

Rob Town of Guerrero.

"The night before, about 100 armed men rode into Guerrero, 70 miles west of San Andreas, and looted all the stores of provisions and arms and the postoffice of all the stamps and money. At this place is a small fort with a few Mexican soldiers, whom they took possession of Guerrero, the same as in the case of San Andreas.

"About 4 o'clock in the afternoon, there being about 20 Americans on the relief train, the Mexicans started back to Chihuahua. The revolutionists told me that they would not attack Chihuahua for four days; that they were first going to get possession of all the country around the city, and then they would attack the city."

DETAILS OF THE FIGHTING IN PARRAL

counted 187 men with rifles, and about 100 more with revolvers. Waiting in the plaza were from 60 to 70 men with shotguns. The first attack was made on the telegraph office. The attack failed. The four defenders were concealed behind the doors and windows, which afforded good protection. Several dead were left at the door of the building, and two of the defenders were wounded. Anastacio Porras, who is a cousin of Guillermo Porras, secretary of state, was shot through the ear and neck, and another young man was shot through the leg.

American Miner a Victim.

"Of the rurales, three were wounded and two killed outright. Tom Lawson, an American mining man who lives at Guadalupe y Calvo, where the West Mexico Mines company, is located, was in his room at Hotel Central during the battle in the streets. A bullet, apparently striking the sidewalk, and glancing through the door of Lawson in the neck. His throat was cut as if by a knife, and he died soon after. Capt. Blunt, an Englishman, also a mining man, was surprised when a stray bullet cut his leg.

Fighting is Desperate.

"The fighting was desperate on both sides. The insurgents had the disadvantage of attacking from the open, and suffered heavily. Those who defended the telegraph office later told of a man whose right hand had been amputated at the wrist. This man carried a rifle and a revolver. He would fire the rifle, and then immediately exchange it for the revolver which he held under his arm.

"After fighting in the streets, which continued until long after noon, the rurales succeeded in chasing the revolutionists from town. A company of rurales followed three men to Minas Nuevas, killing five on the road and taking two prisoners. The two captured had 300 unused shots between them. Another band was followed to Maturra, six being captured and three killed. The rurales' horses were shot down on the way.

Leaders Captured or Killed.

"During the fighting in the town a number of the leaders were captured or killed. But the most important of them escaped. He is believed to be Guillermo Baca, once a prominent merchant at Parral. This man with seven followers, fled from the roof of the candle factory until 2:30, finally escaping. M. Michel and Juan Baca were captured. The majority of the insurgents were farmers from the surrounding country.

"In all there were 41 dead of the revolutionists. So far 63 wounded have been found concealed in dwellings. Of those defending the town, five were wounded and two dead, besides the accidental death of Lawson. "Those who were driven from the city, captured the village of Las Cuevas. Tuesday 100 troops arrived from Chihuahua, and 200 more Wednesday. The weight of the pieces captured by the rurales was so great that Las Cuevas. The result has not been learned."

freedom, it is said, and promise not to bear arms against the insurgents. The fancy sword presented to him by Clarence Chase at a cost of $1300 was captured and is now worn by an insurgent. It is further declared.

Hiram C. Smith reports that on Monday every operation of the Pearsons was dictated by the rebels. Federal officials have returned that town, however.

Wire Cut to Dolores.

Harry Paul, manager of the Dolores mines, wired here Monday for 300 soldiers to be sent at the company's expense. Since that message was sent, but the wires were cut and no word has been heard from Paul or that section.

Much alarm results from this condition, as reports constantly increase that armed bands of rebels and insurgents from the mountains and Sonora are flocking into Chihuahua.

Hiding Volunteer Guards.

Offers to the middle class of $2 per day to act as guards, with arms, horse and board, have been made and only 20 volunteers have been received.

The streets are quiet here and all business is practically suspended. Places which formerly did from $100 to $150 per day, are now not doing $20 per day.

The citizens almost universally manifest total ignorance or indifference to the situation. Instances are numerous where the insurgents have declared that the abuses of the municipal and district jefes are as much the cause of the trouble as the abuses of the state and federal officers.

Governor Appeals.

On Monday last the governor called a meeting of all citizens of Chihuahua and appealed to them to help protect the city. At this meeting, among others he appealed to Donald B. Gillies, of the San Toy mines, to organize the Americans for the city's defense. Upon notice of this act, consul Kenna called upon the governor and asked him the direct question: "Do you consider the resistance of the citizens of the state against the lawful authority a rebellion?"

He replied that he did consider it a rebellion.

Consul Kenna warned all Americans against the slightest infraction of the laws of neutrality if they desired the protection of the American government.

The city is now policed by and under control of the military authorities, although martial law has not been declared.

Rapid Fire Guns.

Rapid fire guns are frowning from the roof of the cathedral, fronting the plaza, and armed men are constantly on watch on the roof of the cathedral, municipal building and Palace hotel.

Offers of big pay for volunteers receives no takers.

Communication Broken.

Since Tuesday no news has come from west of San Andreas. Wires are cut and the Pearson people cannot communicate with Madero, but their trains are running an dtrainmen report all quiet.

Last Monday the Mexico & Orient left Chihuahua with eight coaches with horses, soldiers and citizens. On reaching San Andreas the revolutionists opened fire on the train, killing the colonel, three soldiers and three women and one child, and wounding seriously 11 soldiers. This train on attempting to return that evening was wrecked and several killed.

The revolutionists wrecked the train because they believed the soldiers were returning on it, but the soldiers had been put off at Bustillos ranch, where the wife of Albert Madero, cousin of Francisco Madero, is part owner.

The revolutionary leaders served notice on manager Ferris that they would permit the clearing of the wreckage on promise that no more troops be passed over the line and that on the first attempt that the tunnels would be wrecked.

Eastern Chihuahuas.

Troubles at Coyame and Cuchillo Parado caused the rushing of 30 rurales to these places. The report that they were all practically killed or wounded and that the mounted men taken to Publio on the Orient road, is still unconfirmed, but 500 cavalry were sent to the border and then arm of San Ojinaja, has been reported without encounter, although many heavily armed men are reported in that section.

The conviction prevails that the insurgents will not attack Chihuahua unless forces from the east are ready to cooperate with the mountaineers.

Leaders.

The various camps are well armed, mounted and fed, according to reports. The leader at San Andreas is Herrera, of that place and his force consists of many citizens of this place and surrounding ranches, who have a type of all the other insurrectionary camps at Coyame, San Isidro, Guerrero and Minaca. The orders to these men appear to come from some well balanced authority and are said to be thoroughly respected.

The passengers on the wrecked train returning from San Andreas were carefully searched and the firearms of all natives were appropriated, but foreigners were not molested in any manner. Herrera at this time made a speech, declaring that so long as foreigners did not interfere with them or their operation, that they would not be molested, and the proclamation of Madero was distributed among the passengers.

Parral Quiet.

Consular agent J. I. Long, of Parral, advised the consulate here by letter, saying the city was attacked on Monday and heavy firing was kept up all day. The dead are an American and another wounded, and about 29 Mexicans killed, he said. Quiet has been restored.

AMMUNITION FOUND IN MEXICAN GRIPS

Exodus of Mexican Laborers From United States Is Very Large.

That attempts are being made to carry ammunition into Mexico by laborers returning from work in the United States, is indicated by the discovery Wednesday in the union station yards of 150 boxes of cartridges.

The ammunition was concealed in two grips and a sack of bedding. The luggage was found on the walk by John W. Mershon, a day watchman. There was nobody near the grips and so they were carried into the "lost luggage" room. The weight of the pieces attracted suspicion and led to the discovery of about 150 boxes of 30-30 shells.

Lack of equipment on the National Railways is still causing many laborers to return to El Paso. Sales of tickets were refused Wednesday afternoon and about 200 peons remained in El Paso, unable to return to their fatherland. Although there is always a heavy exodus of Mexican laborers in the United States, the present exodus of Mexican laborers is abnormal at this time of the year. The fact that the workmen carry their clothing in sacks on their shoulders, leads to the well grounded suspicion that ammunition, and even rifles, may be easily smuggled into Mexico. The inspection of Mexican officials is of necessity lax, owing to the great quantity of returning immigrants.

MADERA IN FEAR OF AMERICAN SOLDIERS

provincial government. The proclamation pictures bright hopes of success for the insurrectionary cause and strongly advises against doing anything that might give grounds for foreign intervention.

Madero Mobilizing Forces.

Madero is hiding in mountains on his own land 60 miles from Ciudad Porfirio Diaz and is engaged in mobilizing his followers, according to information given American officials by Mexican army officers. Several detachments of Mexican soldiers are scouring the country adjacent, arresting insurgents and placing them in jail. United States troops were detailed on scouting expeditions on the American side of the river and cavalry was sent south to prevent the smuggling of arms and ammunition where the hand of Madero adjoins United States border.

Madero a Fugitive From Justice.

Francisco Madero, who has proclaimed himself president of the provincial government of Mexico, is a fugitive from justice, being convicted in Mexican courts on November 19, of inciting the people to rebellion. His whereabouts recently have been in doubt, though reports placed him in the vicinity of the family estate at Coahuila. He was a candidate at last election for the presidency in opposition to president Diaz and Ricardo Flores Magon. When Diaz was continued in power Madero disappeared. Madero is credited with being the head of the insurrectionary movement. The importance of the reported proclamation, however, may be less than appears on the face of it, as during his campaign for the presidency, circulars purporting to have been sent out by the candidate announced him as then the "constitutional president of Mexico."

Trackmen Fired Upon.

Sixty trackmen employed on the Mexican International railroad south of Ciudad Porfirio Diaz were fired on by insurgents and driven from their work. Several were wounded. Rurales were sent from Alamo and captured 18 insurgents. The work was being done at night to prevent interruption to freight service and no guards had been used. A strong force has been sent to that point to protect the workmen.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 24.—Ambassador Wilson, at Mexico City, has been instructed by the state department to are forbidden to collect on the street. In the hotels and clubs where concentration is permitted, rumors are numerous and rife with all sorts of supposed plans of the rebels and government.

Much apprehension is felt that the government has not acted with more promptness and sent more troops here, in view of the display of force of the insurgents.

Fighting Was Fierce at Minaca.

Today a message was received from Minaca that the second day of fierce fighting at Guerrero resulted in favor of the rebels and that they were in possession of the offices, federal and municipal, and had named according to their will thought out plan the officers for these places and these had qualified under the regulations of the "rebels." It is reported that more than $50000 currency was the booty secured by the insurgents.

An Official Captured.

W. H. Kraft reports that the insurgents have taken all the saddle horses on the Carlon Zoelof's ranch, which is under the control of Alberto Madero, uncle of Francisco Madero, leader of the movement. He says further that they gave receipts for the animals.

Official Captured.

At Minaca, jefe Francisco Antillon, who during the W. C. Greene regime was jefe politico at Temosachic, was captured Monday, mounted on a horse, and it is reported that he was made to ride between lines of soldiers shouting, "Down with Diaz" and "Viva los Revolutionistas." They also required him to pay a ransom of $2000 for his

ALL QUIET AT TORREON

That there has been no insurrection in the city of Torreon is the declaration of Mexican passengers coming from Gomez Palacio and Torreon on the Mexican National railway train which arrived in El Paso Thursday morning.

There was fighting in Gomez Palacio between 2 and 3 o'clock Monday morning, when armed men assaulted the subtreasury and other buildings in Gomez Palacio. Five rurales were killed on the road to Torreon when the insurgents attempted to move on that city, the passengers report, and the insurgents lost six men according to the passengers from those towns.

"Sympathy in Gomez Palacio and Torreon, which are now quiet, is with the government, even the lower classes supporting the government, although they are not friendly to Diaz," is the way one passenger puts it.

None of the soldiers deserted, say these two men, and the insurgents were driven beyond Lerdo, which is six miles north of Torreon.

SITUATION BETTER NOW IN CHIHUAHUA

Mexico City, Nov. 24.—A dispatch from Chihuahua under yesterday's date said that conditions had improved there. No important towns have been taken by insurgents. Twenty persons were killed at Parral on Monday. Soldiers on a Mexican Northwestern train were fired upon by a band of insurgents at San Andreas. In the fight a colonel and four soldiers were killed and it is believed 20 insurgents were killed. The latter included some women. Soldiers continued on foot to Guerrero, the train being sent back.

Investigate the reported shooting of J. M. Reid, and American in the Alameda in Mexico City. Reid was a native of Mississippi, and the action of the department in calling on the ambassador for a report was taken at the instance of relatives who live in Houston, Miss.
