west of Fort Worth, south to the gulf of Mexico. The census growth of this section of the state, comprising all of west Texas shows an increase for the entire country west of that line of approximately 160 percent, as against a total increase for the entire state of only 27.6 percent. These figures bring out the fact that outside of the cities there has been a very small population growth in east Texas, while an astonishing growth has occurred in west Texas. An analysis of this growth in west Texas reveals the fact that it has been due to three causes:

First—The proving of the fact that the Panhandle is adapted to agricultural conditions, accounting for the almost phenomenal growth of 324.4 percent in that section.

Second—Like conditions prevailing in central west Texas and southwest Texas, account for the growth there.

Third—To the development of irrigation farming in the Trans-Pecos country is due the accountability for the growth there.

Of these three sections composing west Texas proper, the growth of the Trans-Pecos region, while not so large as that of the Panhandle, is the most astonishing and perhaps the most permanent of the three sections, because in 1900 it was thought to be the one section of west Texas where no actual development could be expected, whereas today it is almost universally conceded to be the portion of country where the most may be expected.

In 1900 the average citizen of the Trans-Pecos country had little to expect so far as a great future for his section of country was concerned, and yet the United States census reveals a growth of more than 100 percent in this territory, and many people claim that great inaccuracy has occurred in the enumeration of the territory.

Today there is a large and increasing number of capitalists who are putting vast sums of money into great irrigation projects and many thousand acres of land are, as a result, being put into cultivation. The cost of the operations of the 10 irrigation companies that have done construction work in the Pecos valley in 1910 totals the high sum of $3,564,000, and these plants are in various stages of completion; some of them being as near as 90 percent completed, while others are only 20 percent completed. Among the largest of these is the Pecos and Toyah Lake Irrigation company, which has a capital of $1,500,000. Other large companies building irrigation plants here are:

- Orient Irrigation company, cost $750,000; 35 percent work done.
- Arno Cooperative Irrigation company, cost $250,000; 70 percent work done.
- Grand Falls Mutual Irrigation company, cost $300,000; 90 percent work done.
- Porterville Canal company, cost $215,000; 20 percent work done.
- Toyah Valley Irrigation company, cost $300,000; 55 percent work done.
- Imperial Irrigation company, cost $300,000; 20 percent work done.
- Fort Stockton Lands company, cost $150,000; 25 percent work done.
- Red Rock Canal company, cost $84,000; 50 percent work done.
- Big Valley Irrigation company, cost $68,000; 35 percent work done.
- Farmers Independent Canal company, cost $50,000; 50 percent work done.

All of these companies are procuring water from the Pecos river, except the Toyah Valley Irrigation company, which is getting its water supply from Phantom lake. A large acreage is being put under irrigation from the artesian belt, the proved districts being:

- At Pecos City, 62,000 acres; at Fort Stockton, 23,000 acres; at Toyah, 19,000 acres.

As development and cultivation extends from these towns, wells are being put down and the proved belt is constantly being extended. In addition to the flow of the above supply of water, a third source is being developed over a vast district of the Trans-Pecos country by water which is being pumped to the surface and used for irrigation.

Sometimes when falling rapidly and throwing out ballast to check the descent I have seen the sand that was thrown overboard a few seconds before fall in a rain on the heads of the occupants of the car with the most curious effect.—Princess di Teano in Strand Magazine.

THE DIAMONDS OF AN EMPEROR

The "Stars of Africa" in King George's sceptre and as a pendant for the queen. The sceptre of King George is now the most gorgeous and valuable symbol of power in the world. Under the cross and orb has been set the larger of the two great Cullinan diamonds, the "Star of Africa."

It is held in position by a clever arrangement of scroll work, but is removable and can be taken from the sceptre to form the lower part of a gorgeous pendant to be worn by the queen. The upper part of the pendant is the other Cullinan, which forms the principal gem of the king's crown and which is also so ingeniously set that it can be removed at pleasure. The "Star of Africa" weighs 516 1/2 carats; the smaller of the two great Cullinans weighs 309 3/16 carats.

The Dip of the New Moon.
A great many persons suppose that the crescent of the new moon promises wet or dry weather according as its horns are so inclined that the hollow between them looks as though it could or could not hold water. Of course there is absolutely no relation between the weather and the position of the new moon's horns. The inclination of the new moon may readily be accounted for at any time when we bear in mind the fact that a line drawn from tip to tip of the horns must always be at right angles to the direction of the sun.

Hardy's First Novels.
When Thomas Hardy took the manuscript of "Under the Greenwood Tree" to Mr. Tinsley, that enterprising publisher offered the novelist the sum of £25 down for the book. Mr. Hardy accepted the sum, although he owned that he was a "bit disappointed," adding that nevertheless he "meant to keep on." Next came his book "A Pair of Blue Eyes," for which Mr. Tinsley gave the novelist £100, saying, "There is no great money in the book, but I can see that Hardy is going to get a grip some day."—London Saturday Review.

WEST TEXAS BEATS EASTERN TEXAS IN GROWTH

The Irrigation Possibilities Cause the Growth in This Region.

Pecos, Texas, Dec. 16.—The census figures for the state of Texas present a very peculiar situation, peculiar because of the fact that the figures show a gain of only 27.6 percent for the entire state, whereas four great sections of the state have shown an increase in population each of more than 100 percent.

While the census figures reveal the astonishing fact that no less than 30 counties, mostly in east Texas, have shown an actual decrease in population in the last 10 years, the sections of Texas known as the "Panhandle," the "Trans-Pecos country," "West Texas other than the panhandle" and "central west Texas," show increases in population, respectively, of 324.4 percent, 161.2 percent, 286.8 percent and 109.7 percent. These sections, showing these great percentages of growth, are all in west Texas, and actually west of a line drawn from a point about 75 miles
