was wounded by the Howes, and Tom O'Connor, the river guard who was killed, were former Herald carriers.

New Mexico Officers Here. Ben Williams, chief of special officers for the Santa Fe, and Robert J. Snowden, his chief assistant, are in El Paso and would return Robert Howe to New Mexico to face trial on charges of murder in connection with the death of J. A. McClure, and the alleged robbery of Santa Fe box cars on the Belen cutoff.

Mr. Snowden is said to have secured a written confession from Robert Howe Monday night while the wounded man was lying in the railway station at Fort Hancock. In the confession, it is said that Howe states he fired the shot that killed Tom O'Connor, but that his brother killed J. A. McClure.

The killing of McClure, a Santa Fe special officer, on January 25, followed the tracing by the officer of a wagon from the Santa Fe tracks near Abo, N. M., to the Howe home one and one half miles distant. Considerable merchandise said to have been taken from Santa Fe box cars is also said to have been found in the wagon. McClure attempted to arrest the men and was killed. Abo is on the Belen cutoff of the Santa Fe.

Reward Offered.

The $500 reward offered by the Santa Fe for the arrest and conviction of the Howes will go to the Fort Hancock men who took Robert Howe and killed his brother and father. This was made Tuesday morning by special officer Snowden. The statement was also made that the Howes spent Sunday in El Paso.

Judge A. S. J. Eylar sent word to Justice of the peace M. R. Hemley at Fort Hancock Tuesday afternoon instructing him to bury the bodies of Frank Howe and his son, Guy, at Fort Hancock.

International Aviation Meeting

World-Famous Aviators to Fly In El Paso FIVE DAYS, FEB. 9 TO 13

Roland Garros, the French aviator, while seeking an altitude record at the recent Dallas aviation meet, became lost in the clouds, and his disappearance caused his teammates much uneasiness. After being in the air for some time Garros descended in a lot at an orphan's home several miles from Dallas. It being too dark to make the return flight to the city, Garros remained with his machine all night and at the break of day the following morning he made the start back to the aviation field. This picture shows his fellow aviators, Simon, Barrier and Hamilton, watching the flyer as he disappeared in the clouds the previous afternoon.
