BOYS PLAY SEASAW WITH CITY HALL CANNON

It is a strange sight to see boys playing seasaw with a cannon, but that is what the street urchins of El Paso are doing these days down in City Hall park. Their playmate is the cannon which was made by the rebels at Madera over a year ago and presented to the city of El Paso by Gen. Pershing in August. One of the boys sits on the upper end near the breech and the other sits at the mouth and they have great fun bouncing up and down.

Springtime Aids to Beauty

Gently rub this solution over the face, neck and forehead. In the morning it bestows a clear, healthy glow. It will not rub off nor show like powder and makes the skin soft, satiny and pliable. "No toilet table is complete without a jar of Mother's Salve. It is a splendid remedy for chaps, cold sores, pimples, eczema and skin eruptions. It is antiseptic and heals cuts, burns, scalds and all long-standing sores. "A safe, sure and speedy way to remove superfluous hair on face or forehead is by applying delatone paste. Move enough powdered delatone and water to cover the hair, apply, and wipe off after two or three minutes; then wash the skin and the hairs will be gone. Soap and water dull and deaden hair. It is better to use a dry shampoo to clean the hair and scalp. Mix four ounces of powdered orris root with an original package of the hair with a beautiful over the head and brush thoroughly through the hair. This treatment makes the hair grow long and abundant, and it becomes soft, wavy and beautifully lustrous."—Adv.

SIR FRANCIS BACON

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

IT WAS 286 years ago—in 1625—that the life star of Francis Bacon, the father of the modern scientific method of investigating nature, went down in clouds and darkness after one of the most glorious days that ever fell to the lot of mortal man. It is as if the annals of the world were made to conform to Bacon's life. Before his time men had their theories, and to those theories the facts were made to conform. Bacon said: "First find your facts, and let the theories conform to the facts or perish." And he suggested to men the way in which the facts were to be found—by investigating nature. Don't dream that things are true or false, but institute an actual search, an honest, thorough search, and give your verdict accordingly. Bacon was not of course, the originator of this great method. Aristotle had anticipated him by more than six centuries, but there is glory enough to be the modern Aristotle, the reviver of the almost forgotten work of the great philosopher. The idea, which has so dominated the world's thinking during the past 200 years, "man's sovereignty over nature," may be said to have had its birth, then its largest inspiration, in the brain of Francis Bacon. And therefore it is fitting that Bacon himself made but few contributions to science, he was the cause of the enthusiasm for science in other men, and so deserves and will ever deserve, the large fame that has been given him.

European Cafe Life Is Conducive To Soberness

By DR. FRANK CRANE.

THERE is something to be said for the European cafe life. If we could graft it successfully onto our American village life it would do us good. At present we have it only in our large cities, and there in not a wholesome mixture, blended with our tendency to excess. The great difficulty is that the Anglo-Saxon does not know how to use alcohol. He wants to get drunk. He always wanted to get drunk. Taine, in his history, tells us that of ancient barbarians and of the modern hunters, famous fighters, strong, red headed, blue eyed, white haired fellows, whose only means of having a real good time was to get full of strong drink and roll unconscious on the floor. That taint persists. I have lived for months at a time in Italy, where every body drank mild wine and sipped sugared cordials, and the day laborer's dinner was a loaf of dry bread and a flask of Frascati, and I never saw one intoxicated person. You can go to the Hofbräu house in Munich and see 2,000 people, of all social grades, all consuming beer and listening to the band and not one becoming obnoxious, except perhaps, a stray American. If we could graft the English channel you notice a change. English bars and drinking places are dirty and unwholesome. In Europe almost every family takes at least one meal a day in a public house, where the men and women entertain themselves, but they bring their women and children. They dine usually in the open air in summer. Neighbors chat. Children play. Women laugh. It is reaching out toward the larger family, the promote social life in an innocent and cheerful way. If we could ever adjust the tangled and dangerous matter of alcoholic drinks, either by eliminating them altogether, which is possibly the only solution for a people of our blood, or by giving them a milder form, as wine, such as beer and light wines, as many advocate, and if we could, in every home and garden where all the folk might gather and dine as cheaply as at home, and give the day laborer's dinner, as it were, to be more substantial, and if anything had happened toward softening the harsher traits of our character. We should learn more civility, more politeness, more gentleness; we should be less gruff and grouchy.

A BACHELOR'S DIARY

He Makes His Will in Favor of Josephine. By MAX.

MARCH 20—My last thought when the automobile began to turn over was of Josephine. My first thought when I recovered consciousness was of her. I remember trying to tell her so when I opened my eyes and found myself lying beside her. Then I lost consciousness again, and the next face I knew was that of my doctor, who with Forbes, was trying to patch me up again here on my own bed at home. I seem to have been or some good in the world at last, for when I grabbed Josephine she doesn't want to let me go, shielding her with my body. She escaped without a scratch. Young Allen, who sat beside her had a broken seat will be in the hospital many months and may slightly bruised. I had a number of bad bruises, but my worst injury was to my back and head. It is over a week since I have been, but I can't zig-zag stitches have been taken in my back and neck. I look like one of those crazy quilt things Josephine is making. The automobile was smashed to splinters, but I don't worry me. My hope is that Josephine won't want another one. April 2—I am not coming to you often these days, for the reason that it pains me to move around, and I don't ask Forbes to move on me more than I can help. The good man seems terribly distressed over my accident, and follows me around like a great big dog. I don't have a chance to see than anticipate a wish than he is at my side, seeing that it is gratified. I wonder if he likes Josephine. She comes every day, and yesterday stayed four hours with me. I saw Forbes look strangely at her once or twice, and when I had time for my lawyer, after she had gone, I thought he looked as if he intended to openly rebel. This is why I sent for him. Josephine was so distressed over my condition that she leaned over me where I lay a prisoner on the lounge,

Linguists Seldom Thinkers; May Talk, But Say Very Little

By ELBERT HUBBARD.

LINGUISTS are seldom thinkers. You give four times and energy—both limited, as I trust no one will deny—to remembering words, sounds, accents, throat contortions and nasal acrobatics, and you have no time or energy left for conjuring forth the things. My opinion is that to master the language of Shakespeare is quite ambition enough for the average man. If you speak several languages you will probably speak none of them well. When I last visited the Louvre, a polite gentleman outside the entrance accosted me this, "Sir, I am so licensed that although he acted as a guide to an art gallery he knew nothing about art or its history, and nothing trustworthy could be gathered from him on any subject. This man was a very good type of the continental courier, to be found everywhere in Europe. I was once the general custom of writers to introduce into their papers various quotations from foreign languages. This was done, for the most part, to convince the reader that the author was a learned person and one eminently fitted to give counsel, the superlatives being abroad that wisdom lurked in a strange tongue. There has recently, however, fallen a very just suspicion that well-thumbed dictionaries of quotations have played their parts long enough among the properties of the ink-stained fraternity. And further than this, we have discovered that a man may be able to speak two, three or four languages and still have no thoughts worth recording in any of them. There was a time when the value of an education lay in being able to use it for flashing on the unphilosophical. Happily, things are gradually changing. The pupil is no longer regarded as the heir of the tripod. To weigh, decide and think are no longer daring crimes on the part of the layman, and we rightfully say that if writers are inspired readers must be also. The guff that a man may be able to speak a different mixture than has been ladled out to us in the past. The so-called "learned man" have started the "learned man" more progress more than words can tell; and so, too, have the "learned professions" often been stumbling blocks and rocks of offense to the good and true. I make no criticism of men whose hobby is languages, dead or living; if it accidentally proves that progress more than words can tell; and so, too, have the "learned professions" often been stumbling blocks and rocks of offense to the good and true. I make no criticism of men whose hobby is languages, dead or living; if it accidentally proves that progress more than words can tell; and so, too, have the "learned professions" often been stumbling blocks and rocks of offense to the good and true.

The Employer and the Employee

By Dr. C. H. PARKHURST.

HOW far it is becoming to a workman to humble under the yoke of his employer for the purpose of retaining his position is a question that each man has to decide for himself. But it would seem that in a country like our own, where every one is supposed to be a citizen, and where every one has a right to his own thoughts and the right to express them and to hear other thoughts expressed, it is a question that each man has to decide for himself. There is no fun in being a martyr to a good cause, no matter how good the cause is as good or better. A being possessed of a will, an intellect and a heart is so markedly distinct from any other creature which we know anything about that one cannot contemplate him as a mere thing, mere tool, without thereby unwittingly confessing to a discernment too blunt to feel the worth of what is precious and the beauty of what is fine. One cannot have even the first rudiments of Christian impulse without beginning to regard with a sentiment ap-

WOMAN MAY HAVE BEEN MURDERED

Los Angeles, Calif., May 10.—The scorching body of a well-dressed woman was found here yesterday in a vacant house in the southwestern extremity of the city. The woman was a brunette, about 35 years of age. Physicians said she had been dead two days. The condition of the body indicated a struggle, although the victim was fully dressed, even her hair being firmly pinned in place. A pile of partly built building paper covered the lower limbs. The house was recently built and had never been occupied. A badly battered ring worn by the woman is declared by the police to be the only clue to her identity.

Baking-day has its "Sunny side" Cottolene. The cook is never satisfied unless her baking turns out well. Cooks who have never tried it secure better and more uniform results from the use of Cottolene than with butter, lard or any other shortening. Cakes, pies, cookies and doughnuts are best made with Cottolene. It makes rich food without being greasy. Cottolene food, too, is always digestible, because it contains no hog fat. Try Cottolene—not a "just as good" imitation—on your next baking day. Costs less because you use less. Made only by THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY "Nature's Gift from the Sunny South"
