GO TO WORK

Will Lose No Time After March 4, and May Be in Session Through Summer.

MANY QUESTIONS WILL BE TACKLED

(By Winfield Jones.)
Washington, D. C., Nov. 22.—The announcement of the extra session of congress next spring gives additional interest to the proposed reorganization of the senate finance committee and of the other senate committees. It also lends interest to the question of making of the ways and means committee. Leader Oscar Underwood will not be deposed as chairman, but there will be a strong effort to get as many law officers on the committee as possible.

Washington was not surprised at the announcement that there would be an extra session. It was known after the election that it would be called. It is not likely that he will reach into the fall.

Indications are strong that the coming extra session will be a good deal broader than a mere tariff session. Many Democratic leaders are pushing the tariff and also currency legislation. The prospects are that the Democrats will control the next four years at the outset of the administration.

If the tariff, the extra session will mean that the tariff session will last most of all of next summer. It will not be until the fall that it will reach into the fall.

With the announcement of the extra session, there is little reason to doubt congress is going to be in session most of the time for the next four years. Washington is likely to see about as much of congress in the next administration as it has seen in the present administration.

Bryan Says It's Wise.
General approval of the extra session is expressed among leading Democrats. William Jennings Bryan, senator John Sharp Williams, and even senator Dixon, Col. Roosevelt's campaign manager, approved the idea.

Mr. Bryan said: "It was the wisest thing to do, and I expected it would be done."

Senator Dixon said Wilson had done the wisest thing. He said the country would soon have opportunity to judge of Democratic performance. He said the Democratic program would depend whether it squared with their own views. Dixon said he would support the Democratic program.

Senator McCumber forces business disturbance in the revision of the tariff, but he does not believe the Democrats will dare push such a revision. A tariff reform call for.

Congressman Henry, of Texas, wants an entire new tariff act passed by extra session. He approves the extra session.

Dressed in the height of feminine fashion, his cheeks painted and powdered—this morning was taken from a street car at the Juarez end of the Stanton street bridge by Mexican immigration inspectors. He admitted having escaped from the New Mexico state penitentiary with an American companion three days ago, when two of them sawed their way out of prison.

Questioned regarding his business in Juarez, the erstwhile woman's gaudy appearance aroused some suspicion. Calles tried to talk as a woman but failed. He was removed from the car, and later broke down and began talking in Spanish, although his first conversation was in English.

Through a telegram to the El Paso Herald, superintendent McManus, of the state prison, requested the Juarez officers to hold the prisoner this afternoon.

REBELS WILL BREAK THROUGH

Border Town Falls, After Federals Loose Heavily in Killed and Wounded.

REBELS ALSO LOSE HEAVILY

The Mexican rebels are again in possession of Palomas. The 100 federal troops defending the port made a determined and daring fight Thursday against 350 rebels, and only surrendered after two distinct engagements in which they had 49 casualties, the last of which was fought from house to house.

When the government troops were driven from the town, the rebels entered the town, and fighting continued for two hours. The rebels fired to the belief at Columbus, N. M., 19 miles to the north, that the town had been captured.

But about noon the battle resumed, the rebels still holding a position in their barracks and a few houses, a firm stand by their commander, Col. Francisco Correll, who, though suffering from a severe cold, remained on the firing line. Brisk fighting continued until nearly three o'clock, when the government troops were driven again by hand grenades and compelled to surrender. Aside from the federal lieutenant who early in the afternoon was killed, all of the government troops not killed or wounded were taken prisoner, with their rifles, supplies and ammunition. There was no artillery in the town.

The Losses Heavy.

Official reports to Gen. E. Z. Stever at Fort Bliss give the federal losses as seven killed and eight or 10 wounded. The rebels' losses are indefinitely given as 44 killed and wounded. As soon as hostilities had ended, Maj. McDonald, in charge of federal forces at the border patrol at Columbus, sent word to Palomas that all wounded, either rebels and federal injured came to the border.

Maj. McDonald's report did not say if the men were treated at the border.

New Conditions Arise.

Rebel success in taking Palomas not only scores an important victory for the revolution, but creates a peculiar condition which has not existed since Madero's insurgents captured Juarez. A change of federal forces at the border patrol at Columbus, sent word to Palomas that all wounded, either rebels and federal injured came to the border.

Maj. McDonald's report did not say if the men were treated at the border.

May Be Smuggling Base.

The rebels captured Palomas earlier in the afternoon and held it for several weeks, relinquishing it without a fight a short time before they left Juarez for the border. The capture of the place is considered by some as an indication that they mean to make the border again in an effort to break the military complications between the United States and Mexico.

Not Regular Army Troops.

The federal forces who defended Palomas were not regular army troops, but were composed of irregular forces, including Gen. Tracy Albert at Juarez. The federal forces at Juarez are reported to be the regular army troops, and are considered by some as an indication that they mean to make the border again in an effort to break the military complications between the United States and Mexico.

Only Two Cannon in Juarez.

There are only two machine guns in Juarez, and these are in the hands of the federal forces. The rebels have captured three machine guns and are reported to be using them in their operations.

"Come and Take Them" Is Defiant Reply to Demand For Surrender of Forts.

BULGARIANS UNDER FIRE OF WARSHIPS

London, Eng., Nov. 22.—A battle raged today along the entire line of fortifications at Tchatalja according to dispatches from Constantinople. The Bulgarians began again their efforts to break through the Turkish lines, but so far have been prevented from doing so by the fire of the Turkish warships.

The first classes of reserves of the six Austro-Hungary army corps have been called to the colors, according to a dispatch from Vienna. Three of these army corps are stationed in the north and three in the southeast of the state of the city.

"Come and take them" was the defiant reply of the Turks to the demand that the allied Russian, Bulgarian and Rumanian forces evacuate the line of fortifications at Tchatalja, in front of Constantinople. It is not believed in diplomatic circles necessarily to mean that negotiations for an armistice have been discontinued.

In view of the fact that the Ottoman capital even if captured, must ultimately be evacuated in accordance with the terms of the armistice, it appears that the allies have nothing to gain by insisting on the surrender of the lines, which form virtually the state of the city.

While the Bulgarian conditions for Bulgaria is acting as the mouthpiece of the allied governments, the main outline of the claims in the Balkan arrangement. These, according to a Bucharest dispatch, include the Dobruja frontier, comprising practically half of the Rumanian quadrilateral.

The continued successful defense of the Tchatalja lines would strengthen Turkey's diplomatic position, and the Bulgarians' desire to make a triumphal protest into a permanent one.

Rumania Also Makes Claims.

Rumania has communicated to the allied governments the main outline of her claims in the Balkan arrangement. These, according to a Bucharest dispatch, include the Dobruja frontier, comprising practically half of the Rumanian quadrilateral.

The continued successful defense of the Tchatalja lines would strengthen Turkey's diplomatic position, and the Bulgarians' desire to make a triumphal protest into a permanent one.
